

Student Senate elects new officers

by STEVE NOEL

In a recent meeting of the newly elected 10-member Student Senate, officers were selected for the remainder of the school year. Members of the senate voted Mark Conaway, president, Mike LaVasway, vice president, and John Evans, treasurer. Jan Karella will be the secretary for the senate and will be paid on an hourly wage by the college.

According to Bruce Zanca, Student Trustee and a member of the student governing body, the senate has held two regular meetings and held because of the possibility of a teacher strike earlier this month. The meeting was attended by College President, James McGrath and Vice President of Academic Affairs, Dr. David Williams.

"As a student representative," Zanca said, "I wanted to be prepared for that. Fortunately there was no strike on the college side. The first meeting Zanca added, "was organizational in order to get people to know each other."

Office hours of all the Student Senators are presently posted on the Student Senate window located on the third floor of Bldg. A.

Some future considerations of the senate, according to Zanca, include the possibility of re-designing the faculty evaluation program, and sponsoring an escort-service for night students going to and from their cars in the parking lot.

Meetings of the Student Senate are open to all students who wish to attend. There is presently a consensus of the senators to move the meetings to every Thursday, but because of conflicts in the representative's schedules, a specific day and time for the general meetings have not been reached.

Willow Park to close soon

by PETE WICKLUND

Harper will close its Willow Park extension sometime after this semester. A definite date has not been set by the Harper board of trustees, but the extension's lease will terminate during the upcoming summer.

"The declining trend in enrollment from the Willow Park area shows us that the facility is no longer needed," said David Williams, vice president of academic affairs. According to Williams, day enrollment at the five-year old extension is very low in comparison to previous years. Night class enrollment has remained stable largely due to the English as a Second Language program.

The new I and J Bldgs. on campus will in effect replace the purpose of the Willow Park center. There will be approximately 32 additional class spaces provided by the new buildings. The college will also begin to save money by not having to pay the lease on the facility which is located in the Willow Park Shopping Center in Wheeling.

Despite the closing of Willow Park, Harper will continue to have facilities at the east end of Harper's district. Dr. Williams noted that Harper has a "working agreement" with Township High School District 214 to use their facilities to offer credit courses. Continuing education will not be offered at the 214 buildings so that they will not compete with the high school district's own continuing ed program.

Helga Schulz, the resident manager at Willow Park says she knew that it was only a matter of time before the extension closed. "It (the closing) is going to be difficult on some of the students who attend here, especially the English as a second language students," Mrs. Schulz said.

The interior design program is the only career program offered at the facility. When the extension closes the program will be moved to Bldg. H on campus. Jean Pearson, director of the interior design program, said she "will miss the peaceful and congenial atmosphere of Willow Park, Miss Pearson said she will also miss "the good food in the area," referring to the many restaurants near Willow Park.

Carter signs bill for new Department of Education

by DON MCHUGH

President Carter signed a bill last week creating a new Department of Education.

The department will have a $1.2 billion budget and a staff of 17,000 employees.

Carter said, "The best move for the quality of life in America might be in the establishment of this department."

Much of the credit for the passing of the bill was given to the National Education Association (NEA) who put heavy pressure on Congress to pass the bill by lobbying heavily.

The new department will coordinate a total of 132 education programs sponsored by the government from five departments. The largest chunk coming from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW). HEW will now be called the Department of Health and Human Services.

Opponents of the bill said that the new department will increase the already expanding federal bureaucracy and will give budget cutting conservatives another area to cut from, according to NEA's rival group the American Federation of Teachers. The AFT also argued that the new department will take over the responsibilities of education at the local levels in response to last Carter said, that the federal government is there for assistance but that the primary responsibility will still lie with the parents and teachers at the local level.

The new Cabinet department is the second such department Carter has set up. The first was the Department of Energy set up in 1977.

The new department is a politically positive move for Carter in an election year as it gives him the opportunity to appoint a woman or member of an ethnic group to head the department. Names being mentioned as possible appointees are Jerry Apodaca, former Governor of New Mexico, Mary Berry, AFT, HEW secretary for education, and the Rev. Jesse Jackson of Operation PUSH.

Both Berry and Jackson are blacks, and Apodaca is an Hispanic. A secretary is expected to be appointed within the next 30 days.

The new department, under law, must begin operation within six months of the time a new secretary is sworn in.

Who runs campuses

CPS - A philosophy professor from Ohio University says that the central question in higher education in the coming decade is how to rid colleges of their low morale.

"A new breed of administrator-managers," in the most recent issue of Education magazine, professor David Stewart calls faculty influence an university policy a myth. He recounts how minor salary increases, a new role in the selection of academic department chairpeople, and a growth in administrative bureaucracies have combined to diminish faculty member's power through the seventies.

Stewart wrote the only way to get the balance of college power to shift back toward faculty members is for teachers to indulge in more aggressive collective bargaining in the next decade.

Building repairs complete for the time being

Roof repairs that have been smoldering on the campus for the past several weeks, have been completed for the time being.

Repairs on the roofs of Bldgs. A, C, and D were started last fall with the purpose of repairing the numerous leaks throughout the buildings.

Students were constantly stepping around buckets on the upper floors of the buildings. Hopefully, according to Richard King, supervisor of maintenance here on campus, this problem will be alleviated.

There are still several buildings across campus that are still in need of the flat roof (erring) repairs including Bldgs. D and F.

But because of the prohibitive costs of the repairs they must be handled in sections at a time. Repairs for Bldg. A alone cost the school approximately $200,000, according to King.

King said that, the repairs are expected to last about 15 years, except for minor patching repairs.

The next building to be worked on will be Bldg. D.

Harper sports have to be bad to be recognized

With Harper's biggest team sport, football, soon ending a disappointing season, most students think this marks the end of a losing semester of Harper sports.

Well they're wrong by a long shot. This past season Harper was, and still is, the home of two such successful sports — Woman's Tennis and Men's Soccer.

Everybody is always looking toward the sport that's in the lime light. The good old-traditional football team. They seem to forget that other sports exist.

The Hawks Woman's Tennis team won their NAC Conference for the second year in a row. They are now going to compete in the Nationals.

These tennis players have been swinging and swarming their way to victory again and again.

Can Harper students be heard cheering these women on to victory? No. All that can be heard is, "Football lost again, so what else is new?"

The Hawks' women tennis players can sure answer that. And so can the soccer team.

The soccer team is doing surprisingly well for a first year team. In fact, they're number one.

Why don't we hear more students bragging to other colleges, "We're number one; Harper tennis and soccer is number one!"

Why is it such an exciting sport, such as soccer, played by such excellent students, draws no more than eight or nine spectators?

Why aren't these sports' receiving more notoriety? Maybe a sport has to be bad to be recognized.

Invisible reporters plague campus

This semester The Harbinger has been plagued by imposters, non-staff persons posing as Harbinger reporters. They are misrepresenting themselves and making The Harbinger look bad as well.

To remedy this situation Harbinger staff members are now granted a press card with their name and position in the newspaper on it. The card is good only for the time period indicated on the card. All cards must contain the Editor-in-Chief's signature on the lower right corner of the back side of the card.

It is recommended that any Harper staff or student, being called upon for a Harbinger interview, ask first to see the reporter's press card. The same goes for Harbinger photographers.

If there is any doubt as to the authenticity of a Harbinger staff member, please call Harbinger Editor-in-Chief, Joan Peterson, at ext. 461 as soon as possible.

Hopefully this new policy will end any discrepancy or mix up between The Harbinger and its many invisible reporters.

Decent pay for indecent work

CPS "Decent Pay For Indecent Work?" That's the slogan around the Boston Museum of Fine Arts school after the school's models picketed last week in an attempt to raise minimum wages at all Boston-area art schools.

Letter to the Editor
Student evaluations beneficial

Dear Editor:
In this past issue of the Harbinger the newspaper made reference to the fact that the students have had the right of student complaints taken away from them. I feel that the students have prejudicial views of the way that they analyze a teacher's performance. The students tend to rate a teacher on a personal basis rather than on an instructional basis.

In the Elective departments students usually deal with everyday problems that tend to interest the students. Whereas, a required teacher has to deal with the structure of an algebra, or the force subjected on an oil drop suspended between two charged plates. It is obvious that the students will give the elective teachers a higher appraisal.

I feel that student evaluations can be beneficial when taken on the proper perspective. They are a good source for student suggestions on course improvement, and sometimes they can help to point out a teacher that is not performing their job to the fullest of their capabilities. They should not be used for slanderous remarks against the teachers, nor should the faculty supervisors use the evaluations as a reference for raises or pay increases.

Let's give the students back the right to student opinion, but in the proper perspective.

and classes. The models are also demanding improvements in working conditions at the museum school.

Randy Jansen, spokesman for the 35-member Models Guild, says the Guild is asking for an increase in hourly wages from four dollars to six dollars, which Jansen says is the national average.

The models have also charged that "The conditions at the museum school are not up to the reputation the school has built for itself. The school is disingenuously filthy, cold, and models, staff, and faculty are understaffed."

Carrying signs that read, "Feed the Muscles, Feed The Curves" and "We Need Good

For Our Skin And Bones", the models explained they chose to picket the museum school because the conditions were the worst in the Boston metro area, and because of its prestige.

School officials have refused to comment directly on the issue. Negotiators for the models, though, say officials have said there is no room in the budget for salary increases. However, the models assert the Museum of Fine Arts, the school's parent organization, has just had its best attendance year ever, and that it is adding a new wing.

Possibly in deference to the chilly Massachusetts autumn, the models are picketing fully clothed.

Thompson stresses dignity in class

By ANDY AGORANOS

"These cadavers must be treated with dignity," says Dr. John Thompson, human anatomy teacher at Harner. He is the only teacher here to use cadavers in order to give students a first-hand look at the human body.

He doesn't use names to refer to each body since he feels that is "undignified." Instead, he refers to each body as "this little old lady" or "that old guy."

There are five bodies, four are aged 50 to 75 years old (at time of death) with the fifth being a headless female in her early 40s.

The bodies are covered in blankets and tags soaked in phenol and ethyl alcohol.

The first body the school ever had was donated eight years ago. This body is stored in a stainless steel vat costing $5,000.

The other four bodies are stored in wooden crates that cost $50 each.

Dr. Thompson started lecturing over the headless cadaver, saying her head is being studied at a downtown college.

He explained how the woman underwent a barbitic surgery. In an attempt to get rid of her breast cancer, the surgeon removed her pectoralis minor, the muscle on the front side of the armpit.

He went on to discuss each layer of the cadaver and, when he lifted her ribcage, he discovered the woman had pleurisy, a disease where the lungs stick to the ribs.

Dr. Thompson admitted that he had never seen a cadaver until seven years ago, when he learned of the process through another anatomist. He plans to donate his body to science so that it too may be studied.

He elaborated by saying that burial is unecological and uneconomical. "I don't understand why a dead person would have this little plot of land saved for them."

WHCM: Where the campus rocks

by PETE WICKLUND
 "Our major purpose is to provide entertainment for the student body at Harper," explains Kim Garner, program director of the Harper College Music Machine, WHCM.
 WHCM is a closed-circuit radio station which broadcasts to several areas on the campus. The station offers several different formats of music throughout its broadcasting day, which runs from 12 to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday.

 The station is ten years old and has progressed from a very basic operation to one of professional quality. WHCM is, with the exception of advisor Sue Lewis, entirely run by students. The staff is comprised of over 40 members including disc jockeys, engineers and management.

 Because it is closed-circuit, the station broadcasts only to on-campus locations such as the cafeteria and the library. A and F lounge. Still, WHCM is an actual radio station and must comply with the Federal Communication Commission rules. The station uses such modems and up-dated equipment in its broadcasting.

This equipment includes cartridge machines, turntables and engineering equipment donated by NBC Radio in Chicago. The broadcasting equipment is kept in their studio facility in Bldg. A. The studio is located almost directly across from their general office near the pool tables.
 The format of WHCM presently runs as follows:
 1 p.m. - 3 p.m. Top 40 (similar to WLS)
 3 p.m. - 4 p.m. Album Rock (similar to WJLP and WMBZ)
 4 p.m. - 4 p.m. Progressive (similar to WERT)
 4 p.m. - 4 p.m. Easy Listening (similar to WHCM FM)
 6 p.m. - 12 p.m. Easy Listening-top 40
 12 p.m. - 10 p.m. Album Rock-Progressive upcoming events and review past events at Harper. Another possibility is the station management is looking into featured artists. When an artist or group is featured, their music will be played at many intervals during the day.

 These artists will be chosen on the basis that they can fit into all the different formats. Examples of such artists might include the Beatles, the Beachboys or Elvin.
 The station has 21 show spots during the week. Some shows are team efforts that run with both an engineer and disc jockey. However, most of the shows have only one person doing both jobs. Every staff member runs at least one two-hour show a week. Thirty-six station members comprise the air staff. "We're always open for people to come in for auditions," said Miss Garner. Any Harper student can join WHCM provided he takes at least three credit hours per semester. Positions as disc jockey and engineer are available by audition. And, if a person finds out he is not suited for a job he may be given a chance at another position. Miss Garner stated, "We always give alternatives to people. If a person has a bad disc jockey voice, he is asked if he would like to try being an engineer."
 Either way, Miss Garner feels that students get over the fear of working with broadcast equipment.

WHCM runs on allotted money from the student activity fund. The station uses very little paid advertising. Records and tapes are sometimes paid for out of this fund, but most of the time they arrive in the mail as promotional material.
 The management of WHCM keeps the staff relatively close-knit. However, station manager, Ken Brown, gives the credit to Miss Lewis. "She is really the person who holds the organization together," Brown says. Staff members are supposed to follow a strict constitution and operating procedures. A serious attitude while shows are being run is required.
 While no formal radio career program is offered at Harper, WHCM does give students good broadcasting experience. This experience is always noteworthy when transferred to four-year schools. Recently professionals in the field of broadcasting have taken an interest in WHCM. They have also expressed interest in working with WHCM members.
 "We're always open for suggestions," Brown said. "We are here to serve the people." WHCM takes requests throughout the day. Requests are handled by calling ext. 237.
 "The requests fit the format most of the time," Brown said. When they don't, students are asked to call back when the particular format of the song they requested airs.

FCC forces radio changes

FPS . . . A federal Communications Commission official told a convention of some 300 college radio station staffers here last week that the days of the low watt, college stations are numbered.
 The commission adopted new regulations last June that will force changes in most—and the end of some—ten-watt stations using a part of the FM band previously reserved for educational broadcasting. The new FCC regulations require the ten-watt stations to apply for at least 100-watt power increases, or to get off the reserved band. Edward Perry, a consultant to many educational and non-commercial stations, estimates that anywhere from 20 to 50 percent of the stations won't be able to afford the power boost, he will not apply before the January, 1980 deadline.

 "We don't want to knock anybody off the air," the FCC's Alan Meyers told the college broadcasters. But many of the broadcasters felt the FCC was effectively doing just that. One delegate commented that many professional broadcasters look on the ten-watt college stations as "electronic sandboxes."
 The new wattage regulations were developed at the urging of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. The purpose was to open up some of the crowded spectrum in the 88-108 megahertz educational band for new, more powerful stations.
 If the stations don't apply for power increases, they will be bumped off the reserved educational frequency and onto commercial FM frequencies in the 95-108 megahertz band. In that band, they will not be allowed to interfere with the more powerful existing commercial stations, and will not be protected from interference themselves.
 Perry, who works with Educational FM Associates, a firm that assists more than 300 educational stations, and educational stations, estimates that 70-80 per cent of the ten-watt stations will ultimately apply for at least 100-watt power boosts.
 He expects to have "two suitcase full of applications for power boosts" by January 2, 1980.
 "It will take more than an application to comply with the FCC regulations. Perry estimates it will cost each station $5-10,000 to improve systems. John Bourney of the FCC later told the convention the FCC will require proof the stations can raise the money before the agency will grant new licenses.

Agents career right on cue with astro chart

In this column, is my reply to someone's question concerning their goals: "I'm in the real estate business and have been wondering if this is my calling."

The first thing that I noticed when I looked at this chart, was that the majority of the planets were up at the top half. This indicates an on who is very concerned with worldly achievements and success, as opposed to personal, subjective accomplishments which would be indicated by planets located in the chart's lower portion.

The planet Uranus, which represents uniqueness, the unconventional and integrity, is very prominent in this chart. Along with other indications, this symbolizes above all else a tramendous amount of creative potential. This can manifest in many ways: writing, photography, film making, music, artistic endeavors, invention, teaching or basically any field where the imagination, and unique, new ideas can be used.

It seems that you hear the name on your own, and work best independently. Yet, being creatively and logically professional, and gaining their appreciation seem to be of great importance to you. You may feel, that to pursue success, you should be practical. Unfortunately, creativity and logic don't seem to blend very well, and I can detect a bit of disillusion, frustration and tension that seem to be a consistent part of your nature.

Real estate can be successful for you financially. You are very adept with personal public contact, sales, dealing with properties, houses and being forever on the go. However, it seems that if you have to fit into a "conventional" controlled setting, without an outlet for your ingenuity, you may feel extremely frustrated.

You could work your way towards a management position or have your own company. On the other hand, I could recommend alternatives such as advertising, public speaking, teaching or public relations where creativity is essential and public contact is involved. Of course, you can get involved doing these things for large real estate companies also. I wouldn't be surprised if you were attracted to very unusual fields such as E.S.P., bio-feedback, even, astrology. While the sun in Gemini, I'm sure you could handle two interests at once.

With the driving ambition that is obvious here, (especially coming from one who is a hard worker), I don't doubt that eventually success will be yours, regardless of your career choice. I feel I must mention that if your goals and strivings for yourself haven't completely changed recently, they soon will and in an unusual, unexpected way. This is cyclical, a time period in your life, for the awakening of your own potential, and the reformation of your individuality. It is a time for new starts, changes in relationships, and the restructuring of your personal values.

My only advice is: don't let the practical side of life subdue your inner inspirations and urges. It's time for you to do what you've always wanted to! Good Luck!

Anyone wishing astrological interpretations, should inquire to the Harbinger office located in Bldg. A-37. Look there for further details. Birth data to be printed with chart: Date: 8-29-1948; Time: 10:28 AM; Lat.: 48°14' N; Long.: 9° 23' W.

Music appeal to "dearly beloved"

In the past months I have attended weddings which were well planned, but had a major problem with the form of entertainment. Unfortunately, the music made the evening into a memory or a disaster. One wedding band played music typical of a Chinese lounge bar band, while the other played a collection of oldies that the guests danced to. Of course, the bridal party must decide on what they want because it is their day. However, they should not forget that their music may not appeal to the majority of guests. The bride and groom should understand that a wedding is expensive and the traditional songs and that most guests do spend time and money attending the function.

Many couples today are so busy in the aura of getting married that they forget the most important element of the wedding. A good ball with a large dance hall is useless if it is not fun for the majority of the wedding. Once you realize how much the music plays a major part in your wedding, you will be one step ahead.

First get engaged and make sure you really want to get married. Pick a date, find a hall, and then find a band to play at your wedding reception.

The band should be heard on cassette tape and a repertoire should be in order. A very good choice would be Lawrence Walk, because of the program he chooses, oldies, contemporary, and a few religious songs. A small but helpful song possibilities are: "Beer Barrel Polka", "Beerbus", "All The Things You Are", "I Can't Stop Loving You", "Jailhouse Rock", "It's So Easy", "Isn't He Wonderful", "You Are My Sunshine", "Let's Dance", "Mac the Knife", "I Want To Hold Your Hand", "Just My Imaginations", "String Of Pearls", "I'll Fall", "Someone To Watch Over Me", and my contemporary hits would fit nicely into the program.

The bridal party should ask for suggestions from neighbors, friends and relatives as to possible groups. Don't rush out and book the first band available. Don't book your best friend's band because this may not be the best choice. Do go out and hear the band. Do plan ahead as much as possible. Do make several choices and then eliminate those on a price level. Maybe you can't afford the very best but at least you will have tried because the effort will show. Once you realize how much the music plays a major part in your wedding, you will be one step ahead.

Congratulations.

Sense: Key to diets

America is full of fads from warblers to music, from cosmetics to television. Everyone is always trying to come up with a new gimmick to make people buy their product. One of America's current fads are diets. Somebody, somewhere, whether a medical professional or a New York City cab driver, has an idea for the Battle of the Bulge. Better known as Freedom from Fats! Everyone has the answer for the disappearance of fat.

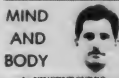

Some of the methods touted by these experts are also interesting. A pill a day, a pound a week is a prime example of diets used today. People stuff their faces with these pills hoping to lose weight by not eating. They look more like junkies than dieters. These pills upset natural chemical process and can lead to side effects such as nausea, dizziness and fatigue. It is foolish to use pills as a cheap way to lose a couple of pounds.

Other unique dieting angles have also been explored. Some feel that eating while standing up decreases caloric intake but in reality it increases digestive systems. Recorded sayings backed up to the refrigerator with "Holla Peaso" Others feel that the full moon affects your eating. It seems that the lunar rays mysteriously decrease eating. The lunar magnet must have level that plan.

None of these notions are real but if you read some of the plans today, you would think that they are.

Nutritionists are experts in their fields. All of them are constantly exploring ways of losing weight sensibly. Why is it that they don't agree on one non-faddy diet? All seem to agree on one thing: there are no such diets as safe, usually. This makes it very confusing for the public to find a diet plan which suits them.

If you feel that the weight can be reaccomplished through commonsense and a little research. People don't realize that we are nutritionists ourselves. We know that the slice of cake will not help us to look like Mr. and Mrs. America, or that pizza consumed late at night will be worked off by a good night's sleep. We don't need a fancy title to tell us that.

MIND AND BODY by VINCENT REDWOOD

One way to invest in a calorie book. This book, which lists all the calories found in most foods, aids in figuring out exactly how many calories you are consuming. Take that count and cut it in half. Commonsense tells you that by cutting the intake your body weight will decrease.

Eating all carbohydrates early in the days is another common sense plan of attack. We all know that activity burns off calories by eating late at night, the body tends to retain and store down. This, of course, does not burn off the calories and the food has no chance of stimulating itself. This, in turn, it promotes to the gaining of weight.

Consume food in small quantities throughout the day and say no to that second helping of french fries. Again, commonsense! Of course, all the commonsense in the world will not work if you lack will power. Be determined to achieve your goal. If not for someone else do it for yourself. A strong will and a little commonsense is a great recipe for a diet plan. Try it and see how it works for you.

How much is a 'clean grade record' worth?

CPS - Michael Gable thanks an academic record without an F is worth $450,000.

Gable, a former University of Texas business graduate student, says the F he got from one of his professors ruined his career. In the mail, filed October 18 in Austin, Gable asks the professor to pay him damages of $450,000.

Gable's suit may be the first grade litigation that suits for money. Other recent lawsuits over grades, however, have generally not given students any of the other remedies they asked for, from new grades to reinstatement in academic programs.

Most recently, Robert D. Miller sued the Hamline

University law school in St. Paul, MN, twice after being dismissed from the law program. He originally sued in 1978, claiming that "irregularities" in test grading and the unavailability of tutors amounted to a denial of his constitutional rights, and that he should therefore be allowed back into the law school. The court ruled against Miller, who had previous carried a 'C' average.

He sued again in federal court, claiming Hamline's refusal to allow him to reappear before the admissions committee was a denial of due process. On July 30, the U.S. Court of Appeals also ruled against him, citing as precedent a U.S. Supreme Court decision that students were not necessarily entitled to a formal hearing before being dismissed from school.

Last April, Harry Mauer, a business grad student at Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville, also sued a professor over a grade. Mauer asked to be awarded an MBA as his damages.

He claims that instructor

John Phillips changed the course requirements at the last minute, and thus caused Mauer to fail the one remaining class he needed to get his MBA. Mauer understood he was to complete the course by writing four papers. Mauer's suit claims that after the papers were submitted, Phillips asked Mauer to take a final exam. Mauer refused, was denied his MBA, and sued.

SIUE legal representative John Gilbert says he held a meeting with Mauer and Mauer's attorneys at the end of August in an attempt to reach a settlement, but that the meeting was "not fruitful." Gilbert has since filed a motion to dismiss the case, and expects the court to act on the motion "pretty soon."

Gilbert adds that students suing over bad grades have cases that are "hard to prove." The president in Illinois, called Tanner v. Board of Trustees, requires that students prove their professors acted "out of malice" or "arbitrarily and capriciously or in bad faith," according to Gilbert.

Former University of Colorado student Larry Goldberg sued to do just that in 1977, when he sued history professor Boyd Hill for failing him three times on an ancient history exam. The failures effectively ended Goldberg's chances to get his doctorate. Goldberg alleged Hill wrote comments on the face of the exam which were highly suspect and professionally prejudicial. A district judge dismissed the case in August, 1978.

Now in Texas, Gable is accusing former associate business professor David A. Wilson - now a certified public accountant in Houston - of ruining Gable's career with an F, and of libeling him when Wilson tried to appeal the grade. Gable says he had a D in the course before the final, and that the F Wilson gave him "killed" his grade point average. The grade reportedly led to his dismissal from grad school.

Wilson's letter to the dean, written when Gable appealed the grade, states, "You may recall that Gable simply did not show up for the final exam last spring (1978) when I was teaching the course, and as a consequence I gave him an F."

"This is my whole career that has been ruined on account of those statements," Gable contends in his suit. "There has been no trial date set."

Ignorance:

A Basic Strategy of cohabitating

CPS - Statistics show that increasing numbers of male and female college students are living together. There are an comparable surveys of how many parents of those cohabitating students know about the practice. But, sure enough, there's a business that tries to help students keep parents ignorant of their sexual habits a little longer.

Four months ago, Pamela Douglas, a University of Texas student, opened a business called Basic Strategy. For a fee, Austin women can use Douglas' address as their own. Douglas in turn, forwards mail to the daughters' correct addresses. Parents' telephone calls are recorded on a phone answering device, and Douglas lets her clients know whom to call their parents back.

"I know there were times when I'd maybe spend five out of seven nights somewhere other than home," Douglas recalls. "I always thought it would be nice if there were a service like this available. It's better than renting half an apartment to the tune of $150, and not even living there."

Building M open to community

Harper President James McGrath and Board of Trustees will host a community open house marking the completion of Bldg. M Sunday from 2 to 6 p.m.

Community residents will have an opportunity to tour the building and learn about the instructional and recreational opportunities available.

Visitors may register at the door for a drawing to be held at 6 p.m. to award a year's family membership in Harper's Health Club.

Some classes have been meeting in the new facility since last week, when the second eight-week session began. Other instructional areas were completed earlier this month. The first annual Harper Classic tournament in men's basketball will be played on Nov. 22 and 24 with regular season varsity competition scheduled to begin on Nov. 27 when the Hawks will host Kishwaukee. The women's basketball team will take to the court on Dec. 1 against Elgin Community College.

The opening of the new building gives the Harper teams a home physical education facility for the first time in six years. Harper has used area high schools and other rented facilities since 1973, when fire destroyed the converted barn which housed the College's physical education program. The new building, approved by referendum in 1973, provides instructional facilities for transfer programs in physical education, health education and recreation. Students graduating from these programs can transfer to four-year colleges and universities to complete baccalaureate study.

A young football guard looks forward to the day he can join ranks of a big college football team like the Hawks.

Special Services helps students

by DON McHUGH

Harper's Special Services division is available to students who are having trouble with their grades. Tutoring and seminars are offered to help raise their grades.

Special Services located in the first floor of Bldg. F, offers tutoring in 25 different subject areas from reading to math, spelling to accounting. There are also tutors available in German, Spanish, French, Physics, Chemistry, Biology, and a variety of other subjects.

The Special Services division is staffed by 15 student tutors and three non-student staff members.

Student tutors are paid $3.10 per hour. Anyone interested in becoming a student tutor should contact Pat Wenzhold in F117.

All of the tutoring classes are individualized to meet the student's needs. The classes utilize a variety of materials to help them with their study skills. Many movies are used, as well as tapes, flashcards and personalized instruction.

There are many options open to students who fear they may be failing a class. The final date for dropping a class is not until December. Students who feel that they may not be able to pass a class but still wish to take part in it may audit the class. This means that the class is taken without credit, and the student does not receive a grade at the end of the semester.

One of the most popular classes on campus for students who feel they need help in improving their study skills is

Nuclear debate causes reactions

by DAVE MOREY

Terry Rieck, a major spokesman for Commonwealth Edison confronted nuclear activist and environmentalist, Catherine Quigg in a nuclear debate last week at Harper.

Rieck was a last minute fill-in for Steven Goldman, who could not attend because of a family emergency.

Rieck opened the debate by stating, "Commonwealth Edison feels that nuclear energy is the best technology for the future, as well as the most economical source of energy." He also explained how we have an increasing demand for more energy, more security, to reduce foreign oil imports and run pollution control devices.

He said, "Coal is dirty and dangerous to the environment. Coal is actually 90 per cent more dangerous than you think of the risks of mining, transportation, and processing." He stated, "nuclear power is safe, no one has ever died because of it, thousands have died in coal mine caves."

Rieck also discussed the recent breakdown and near catastrophe at the Three Mile Island plant outside of Harrisburg, Pa. Although it is too soon to tell the effects of Three Mile Island, he said, "No one has been harmed by this," but admitted, "that a research committee has found that there will be at least one extra cancer death because of the radiation release." He added that a risk factor that must be taken. He said, "We take risks daily, the road could collapse on us right now."

What type of accident could occur? The worst that could happen is called a "melt-down." This would occur if a major pipe burst and caused a loss of coolant. If the emergency backup system failed, the radioactive fission products inside the fuel rods would continue to disintegrate and give off heat. The core of the reactor would melt within a few hours, fall to the bottom of the tank and burn through the steel and concrete within a day.

Rieck admits that radiation does cause cancer, and leukemia, but the odds on any one person getting a dangerous disease are very low, "1,000 times greater than getting hit by a meteor," he commented.

"We have several layers between radiation and the environment," Rieck stated, "Three Mile Island has made us aware of the possibility of multiple breakdowns, safety regulations are much tighter."

He concluded by briefly discussing the radioactive waste products. "Radioactive wastes are stored in leakproof containers, then in steel, and then incinerated in cement."

Rieck said that the radioactive wastes could be stored in salt mines and other geological formations.

Quigg argued that even a

minor earthquake could release the radiation and contaminate the surrounding land for thousands of years. She said that transportation would be a major problem, terrorists could gain control of these wastes, and create weapons.

Currently Commonwealth Edison stores the spent fuel rods in water filled pools on site, Quigg said, "Spent fuel rods are building up in pools because no one wants them. Commonwealth Edison just keeps cramming more into them."

Rieck said that they are expanding their storage facilities to meet the increasing amounts of waste.

Quigg argued that each reactor site is becoming a waste dump. "They threaten our lives with their garbage, they won't expand their research into solar power because it would be a loss of money to them. They threaten our lives for their profits."

Quigg said that evacuation of Chicago would be impossible in the event of a nuclear accident, no evacuation plans have ever been made.

"Each reactor holds the radiation of 1,000 Hiroshima bombs," 4919 Quigg. "One explosion could release it." Commonwealth Edison keeps the public aware of the good points while covering up the bad." Quigg concluded with, "A meltdown anywhere is a meltdown everywhere, nuclear energy is a slow death for all living things."

New program offered to motivate students

by PETE WICKLAND

Harper will soon begin a program to help "high risk" students gain motivation to succeed in college. The program, modeled after the similar one at Illinois Central College (ICC) in East Peoria, will be offered for the first time next fall.

Betty Windham will be the faculty leader for the new program. Miss Windham took a leave of absence last year to observe the program at ICC.

Besides Harper, several junior colleges across the country will be starting "high risk" programs at their schools. These schools include Prairie State College in Chicago Height, Joliet Junior College, in Joliet; Barry Community College in Durham, N.C.; Community College of Allegheny County, West Mifflin, Pa.; and Seminole Community College, Seminole Fla.

The "high risk" plan is to provide "thinking skills" to students who did just average or below average work in high school. These "thinking skills" are described as the ability to understand concepts and to reason. "This will not be a remedial program," stressed Miss Windham. The program will be offered to students who believe they want to succeed in college but are not sure of what direction they would like to take. "Our aim will be to select students who come into college without any definite career plan, who know they want to go to college, and would benefit from the program," said Miss Windham. Approximately 30 students will be chosen for the first of hopefully many of the intervention programs. Harper officials will view the success of the program at the end of the first year.

The program will revolve around basic, freshman, "core" classes. Among these will be classes in English, math, physical science, political science, and advanced reading skills. Students will also take psychology 999 (study skills). It will be in the study skills course where teachers and students will meet to discuss the goals and progress of the "high risk" program. All 30 students will go in the same courses together; a measure Miss Windham hopes will put the students more at ease.

The program will be interdisciplinary and according to Miss Windham will stress social interaction between the students. This close interaction between the students hopefully will increase the motivation necessary to do college level work.

The program is largely based on the work of psychologist Jean Piaget. Piaget did much work in the area of mental development in young children.

At the University of Nebraska Piaget's work was applied to college aged students and as a result the "high risk" plan was devised. The program has run at the University of Nebraska for four years. Miss Windham presently uses Piaget tactics in her classes at Harper. The results have been very promising and Miss Windham hopes that other teachers at Harper will begin to use them.

The "high risk" program will be funded in part by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Miss Windham hopes that after the program's trial run is over that the college will continue the program with Harper funds.

Editorial Harper closes satellite campus

With Harper's Willow Park Center soon to shut down, many students are breathing a sigh of relief.

At last they won't have to go to two schools at one time, to Harper in the morning, Wheeling in the afternoon and then back to Harper for a night class.

However, for some students at Willow Park Center was a great convenience. The Spanish speaking population of Wheeling found the Center's English as a Second Language courses to be a great asset to them.

But for any student not living in the Willow Park area or for those students taking classes at both schools, it cost them a lot of time and gas.

A big drawback of the center for all students attending it was the fact that they missed out on the many of Harper's facilities, benefits and activities.

Willow Park students missed out on many special events offered on the Palatine campus by the Student Activities department. Though many of these students paid an activity fee they found it to be too much of an inconvenience to take advantage of it.

They lost out on great assets like Harper's large library and bookstores and valuable offerings such as the counseling and health centers. They even have a hard time getting the Harbinger.

Being closed off from their mother college these students lacked a sense of belonging with the college.

Harper students will be better off without this satellite campus. Especially with the gas shortage and the high cost of transportation, who needs to drive a car between classes when they could walk from class to class.

Letters to the Editor

Fan complains about soccer coverage

Dear Editor:

I'm a soccer fan, and also a little concerned about the publicity that is given to the team.

I truly believe that the soccer team is doing an excellent job for their first year. I also believe they deserve a lot more credit than is received. The football team is having a losing season yet there are always publications. Why not soccer? I am sure there are others who are as concerned as I. I know the soccer team would feel a lot better if they could see some publication about the team and the excellent job they are doing. It would let these players know that what they are doing is appreciated by the school and their peers. I also feel lucky there isn't more spectators at these games because three-quarters of the

We'd also like to thank President James McGrath for his words of endorsement; and Ray White for his photos taken during the party and all the rest who assisted, but most of all Betty and I would like to thank all the staff, faculty and administration for their kind thoughts and we shall have a constant reminder of our many friends with the Anniversary Clock which we received as a gift.

Former Editor apologizes

To all Harper Athletic Department members:

The purpose of this editorial is to apologize to you, as well as Harper athletes for the meager coverage you have been receiving this semester. As Sports Editor, it was the responsibility of mine to guarantee the greatest possible sports coverage to you, and all of the Harbinger readers.

The mishandling of this responsibility, which led to my resignation of the Sports Editor, is unacceptable.

Again, sincerest apologies,

Disabled students discriminated

CPS - U.S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Patricia Harris has told college presidents that if their schools don't admit handicapped students, the admission denial must be rigorously defended.

In a letter to American college and university presidents dated Oct. 30, Harris attempted to soften the effects of a recent U.S. Supreme Court decision that could hurt the chance of handicapped students to get into academic programs.

The court ruled in Southeastern Community College v. Davis in June that prior interpretations of Section 504 of the 1973 Rehabilitation Act had been too liberal. Section 504 forbids discrimination against "otherwise qualified" handicapped people. The court ruled that Francis Davis, a partially deaf woman who had applied to Southeastern's nurse training program, was not "otherwise qualified" because part of the program would have to be waived to order for her to compete.

Harris' letter seemed to narrow the ruling's impact. She wrote that "if a college excludes" a disabled student because of the student's "inability to complete course requirements," the college still has to demonstrate that the requirements are necessary to the program.

The court ruling, she warned, would not stop HEW from making colleges improve access to campus buildings, provide extra teaching aids to the handicapped, and let the disabled substitute courses or work on degree programs longer.

A school "remains obligated to make adjustments in its program when those adjustments are related to the method" of offering the program, as opposed to the content of the program.

College coupons

Colleges, caught between rising costs and dwindling students, are starting to market their institutions with such ploys as on-air coupons in newspapers.

In efforts to attract part-time and older students one Iowa community college handed out free coupons good for free attendance to as many as three classes. This year to let people see what a course was like before actually enrolling. It has helped that school obtain a 5-per cent growth rate.

Students talk more do less about sex

CPS - Students are talking more about sex, but doing less about it. Counselor Pat Murphy's survey of 623 Rutgers University students found that only eight percent of the students reported they'd had sex with more than one person. Half the women said more than half the men interviewed were not having a sexual relationship with anyone at the time. According to Zodiac News Service, even those who claimed to be sexually experienced were something less than promiscuous. Thirty per cent of the men had sex fewer than 11 times during the prior year. Twenty-five percent of the women had had intercourse fewer than 11 times during the prior year.

Woman's Center offers support to returning students

by NORA NORTON

"I have seen women who came in (to the Women's Center) who were in tears and didn't know what to do, who have received sympathy from the peer counselors there," said Mary Ann Glaser, a part-time student, who has visited the center many times.

"There are divorcees and widows at the center who have found it a very warm and necessary place.

"It's important that these women go to find others of their age—have a touchstone where they can air their feelings," she said.

"I found out about the center through a poster," said Jo Hines, a student in her late thirties.

"It is just the kind of place to talk to people my age and a place to get information about what teachers to go to, what facilities are available—for instance, I was unaware of the testing program and found out about it at the center."

school, but through the support of all the women here and the companionship given, it became easier for her."

"We have resource information in our files pertaining to women's needs," said Mrs. Baker, "and we also have a collection of college catalogs from Illinois and from colleges within a two hour radius of Illinois."

Students can obtain applications from state universities, get transfer guidelines information, help with schedules, moral support or even matches from the Peer Counselors. The Peer Counseling office is located on the second floor of A-Bldg., next to the bookstore. (photo by Rick Kobak)

"We are mostly geared for the older woman student, who needs a little bit of encouragement in coming back to school," said Barbara Baker, a staff member of the Women's Center in P127.

She needs to know that she isn't the only one having problems in going back to school pointed out Mrs. Baker.

The problems might cover anything from "getting dinner on the table on time, to where do I find time to study, or who can help me with this class," she said.

"We are not trained to counsel people professionally," said Lenore Parriz, another staff member, "but we steer people to the proper place."

"One woman in her fifties came into the center wondering how she would do, and we found she had never graduated from the eighth grade," she said.

"We steered her back to the GED program (for people who never completed high school), she took the courses, just loved it and came back many, many times."

"Last year some from the Spanish speaking program, who were from South America, learning English as a second language came in to the center to meet more Americans and get to know them," said Mrs. Baker.

"We had a woman who said she felt more comfortable at the center than she did at work," she said.

"Another woman, I recall," said Mrs. Parriz, "was very, very nervous coming back to "The Women's Center started about five years ago," Mrs. Baker recalled, "and it was not in the hall then."

The center developed out of the Women's Program and then Peer Counseling took over about the second year.

This year the center is back under the direction of the Women's Program and has a staff of three, Mrs. Baker, Mrs. Parriz and Linda Kild Shalwell.

"We have approximately 200 visitors a month," said Mrs. Baker, and are open five days a week from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., adding that not only older women, but all students are welcome.

We have coffee, conversation, companionship for any and all students on the campus, be they male or female," said Mrs. Baker.

"I think there's a serious misprint on page 18 of this book that my chemistry teacher assigned for extra credit."

Saturn brings crucial times every seven years

Life is invariably cyclic: time and time again, we are subjected to ups and downs, to success and failure. These life cycles happen in various stages, progressing from infancy and childhood through maturation and adulthood. This continuous process can be traced for us through astrology, one of the most obvious cycles that astrology plots is correlated with the planet Saturn, which represents structure, difficulties, responsibilities, authority figures, lessons to be learned, fears, guilt, and development of personal worth. You could say that the Saturn cycle indicates periods of struggle in our life.

Approximately every seven years, all persons experience a crucial time, where one must come to terms with the principles which Saturn symbolizes. For each individual, the position of Saturn in the birth chart will reveal what area of life this may happen in to be. At seven years old, one faces Saturn for the first time, learning how to handle the responsibilities of school and schoolwork and relating to new peers and authority figures are often very difficult. At this age, children may be given chores at home, and they are expected to know the difference between right and wrong. They have to listen to remarks such as "you're not a baby anymore, so stop acting like one." Seven years down the road, as one reaches the teens, marks another crisis: sexuality. Boy meets girl and, for the first time, they begin to relate and notice each other in a very new way. Puberty, adolescence, individuality, identity, high school, and added responsibility, all seem to pile up at once turning life into one big temporary mess. As we slowly coast through another seven years, at 21, we magically reach "adulthood." At this age, we are legally responsible and accountable for our own actions by societal standards. So, we meet the world. We can drink, vote, sign contracts, obtain credit, marry without consent, and get throats into prison. It is now time to begin structuring your life. Within the next seven years, maturity begins to creep up on us and, between the ages of 28 to 30, Saturn strikes again. This is the culmination point of the cycle. Saturn has completed its orbit, and returned to the same position it held at one's birth time. If no structure has been achieved in one's life yet, now is the time for it. Many people at this age feel faced with a crisis and become very introspective and restless. After reflecting and completely reviewing the past lifestyle, most make a complete change, realizing this as a turning point. Then a new life begins, on a fresh path. Only to have the commencement of a new cycle starting all over again, to bring Saturn knocking on your door of consciousness, about seven more years down the road... I would like to mention that in future columns I will make a valuable my astrological interpretations for anyone with questions concerning their goals, vocation, relationships, etc. Persons interested may submit SPECIFIC questions to the Harbinger office located in Bldg. ## Beauty is not just skin deep

MIND AND BODY

by VINCENT BURDO

One of the most popular cosmetic items are skin care products. Although women are the dominant users of these products, men are just as liable to damage their skin. Skin care is essential to achieve that total look of fitness.

Bill Dobbins, a researcher of various forms of nutrition and fitness, feels that skin care can be beneficial to not only women but to men as well. In his recent article "A Fitness Program For your Skin," he explains why.

How cultured are today's average college students?

Would you please ask yourself this question, "Why am I going to college?" If you know why, please ask yourself another question, "What is college?" College is the development of the mind and the opening of one mind to new experiences. The music form known as classical music has been around the world for many centuries, but why is classical music so unpopular among Harper students?

Here is a small test that you can take to test your competency in the field of classical music. Can you recognize the following songs in its measure: Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, Beethoven's Ninth, Wagner's "Ring of the Nibelung," Mozart's "Don Giovanni," or Beethoven's "Carmen"? Do you know what happened when "The River of Spring" was performed in France at the Theater desChamps Elysees? What Lutheran wrote the greatest Roman Catholic mass of all time? What composer wrote ten symphonies but because of his superstitions did not want to write more symphonies than Beethoven's "What Wagner song is played in the helicopter scene in 'Apocalypse Now'." What are the differences between a violin, a viola, a cello, a piccolo, a flute, a clarinet, a tuba, a trumpet, an orchestra, a symphony, an opera, motodes, harmonies, and counterpoint? To too many people classical music is the sound of playtime or recent of the angels. But in the majority, it seems very boring.

by MIKE SIMKUS

But who knows how to listen and what to listen for. Listening involves time, and Americans don't have the time. Maybe Americans are scared to try their fellow friends that they listen to classical music in fear that they might be left out of all rock 'n' roll parties. Maybe students don't know or wish to have any type of a cultural background. But this attitude toward classical music is upsetting, because this invites narrow minds. And hasn't history shown what narrow minded people do?

We are fortunate at Harper to have two classes that offer insight to the world of classical music. We are very fortunate to have the best classical radio station in the country available on our local FM dial.

Try classical music, it is interesting, and it will be around for a very long time. No electricity is needed to hear classical music in the performance mode.

A college student should try to experience as many types of possible information forms available to him. Also any college graduate with a good cultural education should be able to answer all of the questions in the previous test correctly.

staying against the grain can irritate and bleed the skin. The best precaution to avoid irritation is to soak the beard thoroughly. This reduces the strength of the beard thus making it easier to shave off. Follow this with a moisturizer to prevent loss of oil due to exposure.

Another major problem that people face is that of sun. Skin damage and aging are directly related to overexposure of the sun. So, for all you Florida-bound people, use oils and moisturizers to put back the needed moisture that the sun takes out. The time you spend in the sun should be slow paced. Don't try to get all the sun you can in your first day on the beach. If overexposed, the skin can become aged and damaged. Dobbins feels that skin care can be achieved by cleaning and providing moisture to skin that is dry.

Healthy skin adds to the beauty of women. It also adds more healthy, masculine look to men. Damage mistreatment of the skin can be unattractive to either sex.

By cleaning and using a skin care program for your skin, you will be proof that beauty is skin deep.

PSY 98. It is a college survival skills class for students who wish to make studying easier.

The class teaches students about memory strategies, test-taking and note-taking strategies, concentration techniques, how to read a textbook more efficiently, listening skills, time management, and a wide variety of other helpful tips to help students raise their grades and learn more.

Although there is no credit given for taking the class, it is one of the most popular classes offered on campus. Three hundred students are enrolled this semester in 10 different sections. The class meets three times a week in PTM.

In addition to these classes, the Special Services division will be offering a free seminar on Nov. 20 from 7 to 8:30 p.m. entitled "Ways to A's".

The seminar is run by Len Bolow, and is free to Harper students. The purpose of the seminar is to help those students who feel they need a little extra help in order to get the grades they desire. The seminar will focus on such things as, how to study for an exam, test-taking procedures, and ways to help students improve the reading comprehension. There has been no room assigned yet for the seminar.

California students face tuition

CPS - California college students may soon have to pay tuition for the first time in the state's history. A committee assigned to find ways to offset the effects of Proposition 13, the 1978 voter initiative that drastically cut California property taxes, has recommended that the state university system begin making its students pay tuition for the first time.

The California Post-Secondary Education Committee released a report last week that predicted the nine-campus University of California system would have to impose a $100 annual tuition because of Proposition 13 and projected enrollment decline.

California students currently pay approximately $240 per quarter in registration, education and student fees, but there is no tuition charge.

However, officials of the California system claim tuition is not imminent. Ruth Taylor, director of the U.C.-Davis academic affairs office, says the university isn't likely to institute tuition for a long time. He says the state legislature, which supplies about a third of the UC budget, "has warned if the university charges tuition, it will cut back its support."

Add UC President David S. Saxe. "Clearly the university has the legal authority to impose tuition, but legal authority is not particularly useful unless UC is able to work out an understanding with the governor and the legislature."

The university has regularly raised the registration, education and student fees levels when its financial pinches in the past. On the heels of the committee report, U.C.-Davis Vice Chancellor Elmer Loren announced that fees on his campus would have to be raised about $50 per year if current programming were to be maintained.

Taylor notes that "the possibility of tuition would become much more real" if voters approve more tax reform measures like Proposition 13.

Proposition 13 has already had a broad impact on university affairs. This year, for the second straight year, the state legislature, Governor Edmund G. Brown, Jr., has asked university officials to list programs in order of importance. He has made it clear the state might refuse to fund low-priority programs.

Determining program priority, however, presents difficult problems. "The Department of Transportation can have low-priority projects," Taylor explains, "but the philosophy of the university, especially UC, does not permit the concept of a low-priority program."

"A program should either be excellent and of university quality, or nonexistent."

Judge rules against student

CPS - A federal judge ruled last week that a college can withhold transcripts from a student who has failed to make payments on her financial aid loan.

In hopes of applying to grad school, former University of Connecticut student Lavonda Romanelli asked the university for copies of her transcripts, but the university refused to give them to her because she had not repaid her National Defense Student Loan.

Federal law prohibits state agencies from taking any kind of punitive action against bankrupt students. Romanelli, however, had not declared bankruptcy. She sued the university instead on the grounds that it had used her transcript as collateral or a "security" for the loan, which is another practice forbidden by federal law.

But last week U.S. District Court Judge M. Joseph Blumenthal dismissed the suit. Blumenthal said the transcript wasn't a "security" because it "is of no intrinsic value to the University."

In 1978 several courts said that private schools could withhold transcripts from students who were in default and who had declared bankruptcy. This case is the first time a public university's refusal to supply a transcript in a financial aid case has been upheld.

Soccer advances to Midwest Regional tourney

By MIKE BAMBACH
 "Today we played our best game of the year." So said Harper Hawks goalkeeper Steve Todd after his team defeated Triton, 5-1, in the NJCAA Region 4 tourney to advance to the Midwest Regional, which will be played this Friday and Saturday at the College of DuPage. In the first game of the Region 4 tourney last Monday, the Hawks stomped Washoune, 5-0.

The Hawks dominated Washoune, holding the Chebs to only seven shots on goal the entire game. It was the Hawks fourth shutout of the season, and the fourth for goalie Steve Todd, a former Rolling Meadows standout, who surrendered only 12 goals in 13 games this year—a goal per game. Todd averaged a goal per game. He had 13 saves against Washoune and stopped all but one of the 26 shots aimed at him in the Triton game.

"They've got great team hustle and spirit. And that goalie!" exclaimed Triton coach Ray O'Connell.

"I'll be disappointed if he doesn't make All-America," said coach Sander Saabo, who bubbled with pride after his team's 1-11 win this year.

"This is the finest hour of my life. I've never been associated with," he said.

Goalie McCalla was the offensive hero against Triton with three goals. That isn't too bad for someone who has scored eight career goals. "Today (last Thursday) was definitely my best game ever," said the naturalized Jamaican.

Ironically, it was Todd who set up McCalla's first goal against the Trojans. Helped by a 30 mph wind, Todd lifted a goal kick into the Trojan zone that McCalla picked up on the third hop and booted past Triton goalie Rick Vestimia. Dan Reynolds, who scored twice against the Trojans, was next. He, too, got a helping foot from Todd as he headed home a goal kick from 15-yards out to give the Hawks a 2-0 lead.

The wind played a big factor against Triton.

"In the first half, they laid back waiting for the second half in order to take advantage of the wind," said McCalla, describing the Trojans' offensive ineptness.

Hawks lose to Wright

By JOE KUSK
 The offensive linemen, not too many people really know who he actually is, but when he is out, his teammates and coaches know exactly who he is and what he means to the team.

The Harper football team surely missed offensive center Doug Radtke's snags for punts and kicks as the Hawks lost to Wright College 20-22 at Hansen Stadium, Thursday night. Radtke was out, like many other Harper players because of an injury. In Radtke's case he suffered a slipped disc in practice.

If the Hawks were allowed to take out three plays of the game, the outcome would have been totally different.

Harper struck first, taking a Wright punt and moving forward behind the running of Mark Bertolino and Tony Borewich. But the big play was a 20-yard run by quarterback Pat Kestemeyer. Kestemeyer, keeping the ball off the option look of upfield during a hole in which three trailer trucks could have fit through, taking it down to the Wright 10-yard line.

From the 11, Borewich carried for two yards, then there was an incomplete pass. Borewich then took a pitchout from Kestemeyer and carried the ball across the goal-line at 6:19 in the first quarter. Here was the first evidence that Radtke was missed as the extra point snap was fumbled.

That came one of the plays the Hawks wish they could have back. On the kickoff, Wright halfback Joe Gathings gathered it in at the 21 and proceeded to kick his way through and outrace the Harper defense traveling 83 yards for a Wright score. Wright added another touchdown early in the second stanza. Gathings taking it over from the one.

But the Hawks quickly came back as Rocky Pugliese picked off a Ram punt to give Harper the ball and kill a Wright drive. This time Bertolino accounted for the big play, breaking through the line of scrimmage and running 61 yards before being hauled down. From there Kestemeyer stepped back to pass and threw a 12 yard scoring strike to tight end Mark Luciano. Jamie Hernandez added the extra point and the two teams walked into the lockerroom at halftime, dead locked at 13-13.

But the second of the key three plays came in the third quarter. Here again Radtke was missed as Hernandez's punt was partially blocked taking him to set up Wright defensive back Darrell Gaet caught it and took off down the sideline and 47 yards for the score, to put the Rams up 19-13.

But Harper had a big play of its own to uncover. Two minutes after the Wright TD, Kestemeyer nailed tight end Barry Vandelinder with a pass between two Wright defenders and Vandelinder turned on the afterburners to complete the 40-yard scoring play. A big play is something the Hawks have not really been able to come up with all season.

Harper kept the momentum going, with linebacker Dan McInahe punting on a Ram fumble to give the Hawks offense the ball at the Wright 16-yard line. But the Hawks were unable to punch it across the goal line and had to settle for a 27-yard field goal by Mike Aevermann, to put them on top 22-13, with 4:02 left in the third quarter.

The final of the "take them back" phase came next to seal the Hawks' fate, when a punt was snuffed over Hernandez's outstretched arm and Wright got possession on Harper's eight yard line. Three plays later Gathings dove over the top from the one to put Wright on top for good 22-21.

The Rams knocked on the door once more but this time the Hawks kept it shut. Wright got all the way down to the one yard line but this time they were to be denied.

On fourth down Gathings tried to take it in, but he was quickly smothered by a host of Harper linebackers.

The Hawks moved downhill, but it was a case of man against ground to cover 18 yards and not enough time as the Hawks had their 34C conference record drop to 1-3 and 1-6 overall.

Harper's last home game and last battle for 1979 will be on Saturday, Nov. 10, against Kennedy-King, with kick-off at 1:30 p.m.

Martin races to nationals

Harper's Todd Martin, come Nov. 10, will be enjoying the sights of Wichita, Kansas, all expenses paid by Harper College.

Martin earned the trip by placing in the top 11 NJCAA Region IV cross-country race on Oct. 27. Martin finished a strong 12th qualifying for nationals, which will be held this Saturday.

Martin toured the five mile course in 20:28, the previous week he ran the same course for the conference meet in 27:31. Martin, a Schaumburg graduate, improved his time by over a minute to make the trip to nationals in his freshman year.

"Todd ran a very intelligent race," said Harper cross country coach Joe Vitton. "He went out right at pace for the first mile then worked the second and third miles to move into the top fifteen."

He only goes after All-American status awarded to the top 15 finishers in the national race.

"We're a much stronger team," continued McCalla. "We just rolled over them. It hurt them to lay back in the first half because we got going as the game moved along."

Despite going against the wind in the second half, it took the Hawks only 6:40 to score. From the right side, Reynolds, headed home a corner kick from 15-yards out. Thirteen minutes later, McCalla added Hawk No. 4 on a 6-yard header.

Triton finally scored, when Paul Mansel poked a chip shot past a screened Todd, but not before McCalla had scored his third goal to put the Hawks ahead 1-0.

Against Washoune, Hawk leading soccer Steve Nix, who has 13 this season, Andy Bobovacki, John Prelli, and Frank Bonetti were the authors of the Hawks' goal onslaught.

"We played them (both Washoune and Triton) on a larger field which is much to our advantage," said Saabo, referring to his team's characteristically potent offense.

"We try to do things we can't have playing long balls and utilizing our speed. We played a gap defense to split up their offense and let our forwards pick up the ball."

"He gets on us, but he psychs us up," said Jay Ford. "He came in here with defense oriented players and turned some of them into offensive players."

Saabo gives credit wholly to his team.

"They keep coming and plugging at you. They never give up. That's the key to our success," he said.

"I've scored a lot of goals in college," he said. "And I've even made All-America three times. But this is the finest moment of my career."

Board oks faculty contract

The Harper Board of Trustees, meeting for their November session last Thursday, ratified the collective bargaining agreement with the faculty senate.

After a short discussion in which board member Dasher protested that the proposed contract was "far more than the college could afford to spend," the board approved the contract by a vote of five to one with Student Trustee Bruce Zanca and member Shirley Mounson not in attendance. Dasher was the only dissenting voter.

The agreement represents an 8.71 per cent salary increase plus promotion costs, work load and overhead pay adjustments, representing overtime, for a total cost of $870,000. The board unanimously approved a request by the Charles Hinton to take a nine month leave of absence. Hinton is a professor of Student Development here at Harper.

The board also approved the administration's recommendation to OK a cooperative agreement between Harper and Elgin Community College.

The agreement allows access to the Dental hygiene program here at Harper to up to two students from Elgin. In return Elgin has agreed to offer Harper residents reserved space in their Dental Assistant training program. There is no limit on the amount of trainees that Elgin could reserve.

Faculty evaluations in this issue

By DON MUEHL

Starting this week, the Harbinger will be offering students an opportunity to evaluate their teachers.

The evaluations are sponsored solely by the Harbinger staff, and are in no way connected with the administration or various departments.

The purpose of the evaluation is to give each student an opportunity to voice his or her opinion on their teachers for this semester.

In recent years, Harper has had student evaluations for teachers using a questionnaire developed by the University of Illinois. The evaluations were distributed to one film for each teacher. The completed questionnaires were then sent back to the university for processing.

Two years ago, the evaluations were offered every semester, but because of the high cost of the process, they were offered only once last year.

This year the college decided to abandon the present evaluating system and replace it with a new system that will be conducted within the school.

However, this plan will not be ready until next semester. The Harbinger Faculty Evaluation will work quite simply, and has a number of advantages to the student.

The evaluation works like this: On page two of this week's Harbinger, there is a faculty evaluation form. The form consists of a list of questions concerning a teacher's performance in class. Each student should answer each of the questions rating the teacher on a scale of one to five with one being worst and five best. The forms should then be handed in at the Harbinger office located in the center. The forms will be issued in the next issue of the Harbinger as well as this one. The deadline for handing in the forms is Dec. 4.

Once all the forms has been in, the results will be tabulated and each teacher will be given a grade point average based on the students' responses. The results will be printed in the Dec. 10 issue of the Harbinger.

The advantages offered to the student by the evaluation are: it offers the student an opportunity to see what other students feel about the teachers they currently have or will have in the future.

It gives students who are not going to be here next semester an opportunity to evaluate their teachers.

Most important, it gives the student body an opportunity to voice their opinions positive and negative about the faculty on campus.

Deputy Director of ICCB explains responsibilities

By Don Muehl

"People think just because they have 120 hours of completed course work that they are eligible for a bachelorette degree," said James Howard, Deputy Director of the Illinois Community College Board (ICCB).

Part of our responsibility is to coordinate community college programs with those of the state universities.

The ICCB is also responsible for developing state-wide budgets for community colleges as well as approving building projects and new programs at the community college level. Unfunding programs has been an area of great concern for the ICCB. One of the greatest areas of concern in this area is business according to Howard.

He said that elitism on the part of certain universities results in many of the classes students take in a two-year school not transferring to a four-year school. Universities want students to take their business law class instead of someone else, and they won't accept the transfer credit," Howard said.

It requires careful planning on the part of the student in order to not get caught up in taking classes they cannot use when they transfer.

"Sometimes it is more feasible for a student to transfer after one year," according to Howard.

The board is also responsible for distributing state funding throughout the community colleges. Approximately $12 million flows through the office each year. An additional $15 million comes to the colleges from a different board to be used for vocational programs. (100 million of the money is distributed in the community colleges through FTE grants. FTE grants are based on the number of full-time equivalent credit hours each college spends. An additional $15 million is distributed to colleges with a low tax base area, areas where little revenue is generated by local taxes. Harper does not qualify for this type of funding.)

There is proposed legislation before the Illinois House that would allow for additional money to be allocated to districts with low tax rates.

Howard could qualify for this type of funding if it is passed. However, Howard feels that this legislation has little chance of being passed. In his words, "A lot of legislators feel that if taxpayers would not approve increased taxation, then why should the state subsidize these schools."

Howard said that there is a problem with the way community colleges currently receive funding. Under the present system, funding is based on the number of full-time students stay that a college has or the equivalent number of entering freshmen, and increasing amounts of funds becoming involved in continuing education, rebids are receiving less funding and still having to support the same amount of programs.

Howard said that the solution lies in changing the funding formula to include categorical concrete, but the Board of Higher Education has refused to go along with this idea.

Campus thefts up

By PETER WERLEND

A slight increase in the number of auto break-ins in campus parking lots has been reported by Harper's Police Safety department says that there is no need for alarm. Kevin King, director of campus public safety, reported that there were four break-ins in cars in Harper parking lots during the last month. The thefts, which mostly involved stereos, CD radios, and tapes, increased slightly over the average of one to two break-ins a month. King does not fault the safety department for not being able to prevent the thefts. "There are 11 parking lots on campus with almost five to six thousand cars a day filling into them. Four thefts in a month is not that bad when you realize the huge number of cars there are parked on campus throughout the day," King said. According to King, there is almost always a public safety car patrolling the lots on campus.

King advises people to follow a few rules to prevent auto break-ins: take out and lock valuables in the trunk and always lock the car when leaving. King feels that auto break-ins can be prevented when people take the time to be cautious.

Harbinger offers Harper teacher evaluations

For the first time in the Harbinger's history students will be given their day in court! For years Harper students have been filling out teacher evaluation forms, rating their teachers from good to bad.

This semester, however, will have no evaluation forms to fill out and rate their various teachers. So the Harbinger is giving students an opportunity to express their views and comments, good or bad, about the most valuable people on this campus—teachers.

The Harbinger staff encourages students to take part in this evaluation survey. It's the best way to let fellow students know that the teacher they hate is the same teacher everyone else hates. Good teachers should be commended for doing such a good job.

Students complain a lot about "rotten" teachers, now there's a way to expose those bad apples.

The best way to do this is to fill out the form below and return it to the Harbinger office, A307. Responses will be printed in the Harbinger.

Maybe if some teachers knew their students' opinions of them would be printed in the Harbinger they might keep on their toes; and teachers already superb in their teaching profession would be secure with the fact that their efforts are appreciated.

Willow Park defended

Dear Editor
In response to your editorial cheering the demise of Willow Park Center, I would like to point out that the center has served hundreds of students who live in the east end of the Harper district. Many of these students have full-time jobs during the day and have been able to attend classes at night, because Willow Park Center was conveniently located near their homes.

You may also be interested in knowing that part-time students of Willow Park Center are not required to pay an activity fee, or a parking fee, so they do not feel they are "missing out" or being cheated in any way.

People who live in the east end of the district are also affected by the gas shortage and high cost of transportation. Aren't they deserving of some consideration? Why not visit Willow Park Center in the evening? Not all students are "benefiting" a sigh of relief because Willow Park Center is closing.

Yours truly
Pat Moughamian

Wener heads foods group

by NORA NORTON

"We went to the Marengo Meat Packing plant near Rock-Island," said Jane Nicolas, a freshman taking courses in food services management, who admitted it was an unusual field trip.

"We went in and saw the cows brought in from the field. They shoo them and hang them by their hind feet," she explained.

"First they cut the head and hoofs off, then they then cut the front open," she said.

"We saw how the parts were cut up and processed during a 45 minute tour," said Miss Nicolas.

"It's surprising how little change has occurred in the slaughtering process," said Cliff Wener, Director of Food Service Management, especially if you read Upton Sinclair's novel "The Jungle," which was written over 50 years ago.

"All the beginning, we just chopped up vegetables and learned how to prepare them properly," she said.

Then she learned how to make different kinds of cream soups and soups, she said.

"We had to make onion soup one day," said Miss Lebl, "and we cooked the onions so long they fell apart instead of being firm."

"The students get much practical training at Harper," said Wener, a graduate of the University of Illinois, who is also experienced in the management of fine dining, fast food service and catering.

"We do two things in our department," he noted.

"We are responsible for the entire food service here on campus which includes the cafeteria, catering and involvement in all food and refreshment services. Wener explained.

"Practically all the food that is served on campus is made fresh daily," he said, "using mostly fresh food, fruit salads, bread and pastry."

Unlike the elementary and high schools, Wener pointed out that the cafeteria is not subsidized by federal funds of any kind.

"We buy everything on the market locally and try to keep our prices as low as possible," he said.

Besides the food service in the cafeteria, we have several different food service programs to teach students hotel, restaurant and institutional management," said Wener.

Denny's, Hilton's and Holiday's in Michigan are some of the restaurants that hire Harper students," he said.

"We also have one year programs for bakers and chefs," he said.

"In fact, I just got word from a hotel in Texas that is looking for a chef," said Wener.

"Calvin Bennett, new this year, is our Chef and the instructor of our cooking program," Wener said.

Wener said, "and our Baker is Ed Gar-muth, who has been here since the school started 10 years ago."

"We have about a 50-50 average of male to female students," he said.

"There are more requests for male chefs and bakers, primarily because of the heavy lifting and heat in baking," he said. "but I see no reason why a woman need be excluded from these fields as long as she is capable of doing the job."

International Study

Harper and the American Institute for Foreign Study will sponsor a three week tour with stops in London, Paris, Munich and Rome. Then participants will fly to Athens for a cruise on the Aegean Sea before returning to Chicago.

The trip will cost $2,145. This includes air fare, accommodations, two meals daily three per day while on the cruise, sightseeing tours, baggage handling and insurance.

Arrangements to secure academic credit can be made for those participating in the trip.

For further information contact any of the following faculty members: Suzanne Herron ext. 231, Bill Nelson, ext. 314, or Cliff Wener, ext. 570.

Jamieson offers a 'Timeless Beginning' to center

by Joan Peterson

For most Harper students getting through school can be a real hassle. Walking from class to class can be a wear and tear on the machine.

For 24 year-old Barbara Jamieson getting from Hall A to Bldg. B is more than a hassle, it's a serious struggle for survival on the college campus.

Miss Jamieson, who has a secretarial degree from Harper, has a unique artistic talent and also suffers from cerebral palsy.

Now a part-time student, Miss Jamieson is concentrating on her art work. She recently donated a painting entitled "A Timeless Beginning" to Harper's Women's Center to be displayed temporarily.

"I can't put a number on how many I've done," she said. "I could guess about 120. I've had a lot of orders for paintings. When I do a painting I either throw it out or I like it and keep it."

Miss Jamieson said she tries to express herself in her artwork as well as poetry, her feelings and thoughts. She dedicated the following poem to Harper teacher Harley Chapman, "I live my life like a bug trapped between two closed windows."

And trapped is a good description for that young artist. Trapped with the knowledge of the many things she could accomplish on her lifetime if each step she took wasn't such a struggle. Her affliction doesn't keep her from living a life very similar to her fellow students.

"I like Harper but I need people to help me from building, to building. I want to be as independent as possible," she said. "But I can't walk outside too well. I don't like people to help me. It makes me feel like a little kid or worse off than I am."

However, Miss Jamieson's

outdoor experiences don't always have to be that bad. "I usually stand there and wait for someone to come along who is bad way decent," she said. "If they can understand me, I ask them if they'll walk me to my class. I've had a lot of people walk away from me. When I have to walk up stairs where there's no elevator, they just look at me like I'm retarded. They don't understand me."

Besides having cerebral palsy, Miss Jamieson has severe hearing loss to both ears. "Had my speech problems are because of my ears. I can't hear myself," she said. In grade school she couldn't hear the teacher so she taught herself to read lips.

Despite all these handicaps she remains optimistic. She plans to marry someday and raise a family.

"Once I know somebody I never hurt that person. I like people if they accept me as I am," she said. "Some people can't handle my problem but I have to go on."

College entrance a breeze

CPG — A huge majority of freshmen think that college wasn't as hard to get into as they had imagined. A study released at the College Entrance Examination Board convention also found that test scores are not the single most important factor in admissions.

The study, done by the College Board and the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers, showed that most admissions officers consider overall high school performance as the most important factor in assessing an applicant, with test scores second in importance.

"A single performance on a test can't replace four years of performance in high school," summarized Stephen Ives, College Board program research director.

Almost 80 percent of the freshmen questioned said getting into college is in "level" words, "not as hard as is thought."

Admissions officers contributing to the research said their own standard for the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) was a combined math and verbal score of 74. William Van Dusen of the College Board said more than three quarters of the people who took the SAT had scores over 75.

A guide to financial aid

by Wendy Winkler

Financial aid awards for those willing to look for it. The financial aid office is located in Bldg. A104 and opens from 8:15 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Information can be obtained on a walk-in basis or by calling ext. 208349. The purpose of the program is to make financial aid available to those who can benefit from further education but need help making ends meet. Any state or federal assistance is based on demonstrated financial need.

According to information from the United States Office of Education, students are classified as either independent or self-supporting students. This criterion establishes a self-supporting student as not having been listed and will not be listed as an exception if a spouse for the year prior to the academic year for which aid is needed.

Has not and will not receive financial assistance of more than $750 from his/her parents in the year for which aid is requested.

Has not lived or will not live with his/her parents for more than six total weeks during the year in which aid is received and the year prior to the academic year for which aid is requested.

These requesting financial aid are required to apply to three agencies: Illinois State Scholarship Monetary Award (ISSM), Basic Educational Opportunity Grant (BEOG) and a Personal Aid Form (PAF).

Financial assistance is put together in a package of one or more types of aid individually. Eligible students are notified with award letters. However, an interview is required prior to acceptance of this award.

Since the results of the BEOG application and the BEOG are needed before the package can be arranged, students are urged to apply early. Those having completed their folder by June 1 will receive first consideration. Folders received later than June 1 will be handled on a first come first served basis.

"Dear Juli: I have been curiously experimenting with LSD to expand my musical horizons. Do the stars say this is the right step in becoming a successful musician?"

Ah, yes, an experimental mind! Not only does the chart indicate open minded experimentation, but also an interest in all the unusual things, the occult, magic, hypnotism, devilish feats, hallucination, death reencarnation, sex, and drugs. Probably all of the so-called mysterious and "taboo" things fascinate you and draw your attention like a magnet. And, I think, that there is an attitude of not believing second-hand information. You have to check things out for yourself!

Are you a bit psychic? Your chart indicates intuitive abilities, and also, a great deal of emotion, creative inspiration, and imagination. A musical career fits the picture perfectly, as any other creative artistic field would. I can't help but wonder if you have investigated electronic music since you have natural ability for technology and electronics.

Your career choice suits you well, and I am quite sure you have the necessary talent and potential to become a professional musician, granting you apply yourself and climb up the right ladder.

Experimenting with drugs is one method of altering your conscious mind. Investigating other states of consciousness can be very beneficial from an artistic, inspirational point of view (as long as you come back to reality). It can help creation. Most likely your music is original, if it's not, it should be. I recommend that you proceed with extreme caution with your "experiments", if you must at all. Your chart indicates the possible tendencies for addiction, delusion, and self-deception. Your sun is in the 11th house which indicates unconscious inspiration but also restrictions, confinement, and limitation. You could become your own enemy without realizing it.

There are numerous other methods of altering your conscious mind available that I encourage you to investigate. Meditation is one way, and that can give you plenty of headway for experiments.

I suggest you draw upon your emotions and intuition for your musical expression rather than drugs. Remember one thing, what might sound like music to you while your "tripping" may sound like it's scattered to others.

Professional instruction in music theory and application from a variety of qualified sources, dedicated practice, patience and effort can take your talents the furthest. Care you gain confidence in your abilities, you can refer them to the public locally, and with experience you can eventually work your way up to a larger scale and success. Good Luck!

I feel I should mention one more thing, though unrelated to your question. Your chart indicates a need for spirituality. Not necessarily through the conventional form of religious beliefs, for I'm sure you wouldn't fit that pattern. Maybe an Eastern philosophy of spiritualism would suit you better, but either way, the need is there. How about if you experiment with that for a while?

Anyone wishing astrological interpretations, please submit specific questions to the Harbinger office located in Blog A367 along with the required birth data.

Stress causes problems

Stress is a situation that has touched each and every one of us. It can happen at any time, anywhere. Mere mention of the word brings fear into man. It can cause ulcers, heart attacks and even strokes.

MIND AND BODY

by VINCENT BURDO

Stress is an situation that causes your body to gear up for a major effort. It can range from an accident in your car, to the fear of failing that final exam.

Stress consists of chemical reactions. There is an instant stimulation of certain glands. They produce body chemicals that raise your blood pressure, while others make your heart beat faster.

Leading a job, emotional disturbances, all these and more create a situation of stress.

Harald Taub, expert researcher in exercise and nutrition feels, "Exercise can lessen the effect of stress."

Taub adds, "Your glands don't think they react." Stimulate them with any kind of danger or emotional challenge and they will prepare your body for intense physical activity.

"If the activity is not for becoming," says Taub, "The chemical reactions persist. The heartbeat remains agitated, the blood pressure high, the oxygen consumption greater, the mental activity frenzied. Then you become prime target for a heart attack, stroke or stomach distress."

Taub feels, "Hard continuous calisthenics guard against the ill effects of stress."

Remember, we're talking about a stress situation. So hard exercise is important. "Your body has been equipped to fight off any obstacle so hard exercise is the only way to release bottled up reactions," adds Taub. "You must also exercise at the right time, too when you feel the symptoms of stress—the fast heart, the tight head, such stomach, that is the time for intense exercise."

Waiting if stress occurs has now reward. If not treated by exercise stress can begin to wear your body. Get right out and run or do some other type of intense exercise. This will help work your system back to normality fast. Not only will you be protecting your health and life, you'll also clear your head, so that you will be able to think clearly. There's no doubt about it. Stress demands immediate hard exercise.

Doing hard exercise can release those deadly chemicals that are caused by stress. The next time you feel stress exercise hard immediately. That can help save your life and rid your body of that menace called stress.

Hockey team gets the shaft

by FETE-WICKLUND

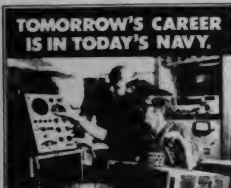

Starting this year there will no longer be an official hockey team at Harper. The reason seems mainly from financial restraints such as the expense of renting an ice rink for games and practices.

John Gelech, Associate Dean of Physical Education told the Harbinger that cutbacks in funding was the major reason for the sport to be cut. "Ice time was becoming very very expensive," Gelech said. Besides the expense of ice time Gelech said that it was "rueful and go" finding ice time for the team. There are very few ice rinks in the area and nearly all of these rinks already were being used by park district and youth leagues. Another factor in ending hockey at Harper was the fact that only two other colleges in the state have hockey programs. Thus, out of state travel would have been necessary for the team and Harper officials no longer permit this type of travel.

Gelech said that another prime reason for dropping hockey was the opening of the new gymnasium building. "We're trying to build some momentum for the new facility," Gelech said. While hockey is being cut, the athletic department is trying to add new sports that can be played at campus facilities. Plans are also being developed to add to the school's sports programs. A recent example is the girls soccer team.

Football turns over final win

The Harper football team closed out somewhat of a disappointing season on a high note, in their final game for the fall of 1979, breaking a five game losing streak.

The Hawks ran roughshod over the Statesmen of Kennedy-

King, 22-6, to finish up with a record of 4-5 overall and 1-0 in NAC conference play.

The score should have been much higher, but the Hawks as all season long, were plagued by turnovers. In their final home game on the frigid afternoon, Harper had nine fumbles.

The big gun for the Hawks was running back Mark Bertolini who again broke the 100 yard barrier. The third time in the last four games that Harper played.

Harper basketball bounces into play

by JOE KUNEN

To say Harper College basketball coach Roger Bechtold is looking forward to the upcoming 1979-80 campaign, is somewhat of an understatement.

For the first time the Hawks will have actually a home court they can call their very own, a practice place that won't change from day to day and full use of all of Building 12's facilities.

Last season they played their home games at St. Vlater High School in front of screaming throngs of 50 people on a good night. They held practice at various elementary junior high and high schools wherever there was an open court.

"This is the first year I feel good about going into the season, there are so many positive things that year compared to the negative things in the past," said Bechtold. "We've never had a court of our own. This is the first time we are running a good quality athletic program, and hopefully we'll get the better quality of athlete."

Last season the Hawks were hurt by their lack of a quick guard, something Bechtold hoped to get coming into this year. Bechtold got his wish in the form of transfer student-guard Tim Logan.

"Tim is a well-rounded ballplayer. He'll be an especially quick player, the quickest on the team. He should really play in this year," said Bechtold of his early prospect.

The early season starting lineup will feature four starters from last year's squad.

Harper should be exceptionally strong at the rear forward spots. Returning this season are second team All-Conference Craig Rawlins and third team All-Conference Jeff Martinak.

Rawlins at 6-foot-4 is somewhat on the small side for a college forward but can be counted on for the key rebounds needed to get the Harper fast break started in the other side of the court. He was definitely from the corners for the Hawks last season. Last season Martinak averaged a little over 10 points a game and averaged almost 20 points a game in the last few minutes the Hawks had after coming off an injury.

"Jeff is probably the best pure shooter on the team. Hopefully he'll have another fine year to help out offense," said Bechtold. "That overall everyone on our team that we've got is in rebounding will be in most of the games. We'll have to maintain our fast break style of offense and our pressure defense. This year we'll be going more to man more than we did in the past, last season we didn't have the same we didn't have a match-up zone."

Some others who should play plenty of playing time throughout the year are Mike Bajjey, Gary Miller, Jack Brown, Steve Lettrock, Skip Lewis, Tom Bunnick, Brian Wehlin and Robert Moe.

"We're arriving at a winning season, finishing in the upper division of the conference and quality to go downstate," said Bechtold. "We last year's squad posted a mark of 13:11 returner. Craig Chuppek Chuppek directed the Harper offense attack last season and was the team's assist leader.

"With four starters returning that's bound to help. Another thing we have this year that we didn't last year is we have after ballplayers to push the starters. I have eight players that I can put in and out and not lose anything," said Bechtold. "This is the best passing club I've ever had. This is the first team in a long time that we can play in running game consistently and get away with it."

Bechtold also sees transfer Chris Plank being a possible starter at guard along with capping freshman Dave Strava playing well in early practice sessions. Another person who Bechtold sees as helping is Jeremiah Gorman. Gorman, a starting defensive end on the Hawks football team, just needs time to make the transition and learn the plays before he starts making contributions.

The Hawks have no player over 6-foot-6 but Bechtold does not see that as exactly a weak point.

"Height is somewhat over-rated. For us we'll have to screen off well and react to the ball better than other teams and scout Bechtold."

"Most teams will look at our roster and think they'll have a strong rebounding edge. If we can't rebound we'll be in a lot of trouble. We'll be in most of the games. We'll have to maintain our fast break style of offense and our pressure defense. This year we'll be going more to man more than we did in the past, last season we didn't have the same we didn't have a match-up zone."

Wrestlers begin new season

by KIP VAN HAGEN

It's that time of year again when the snow starts to fall, there's a chill in the air, and the wrestlers start to crawl out of the woods! This year's Harper wrestling squad has its work cut out for them. Last year they placed fifth in the nation and booked a national champion in the likes of graduate Mike Herz. Hoping to fill Herz's shoes are returning national qualifiers Dan Weber, Jeff Herbert, and Sean Mezal, these individuals are expected to jump the Hawks in another banner year.

Returning letterman Robby McWhorter and Lou Joseph along with newcomers Mike Levy, "H D" Leggett, Bob Van Boven, Mike Averston, Dave Lukowski, Scott Mahoff, Don Arrigo, Mike Walton, and "Burry" Ross will help in the starting squad. It's safe to say that the Hawks will need all they can be ready for action come the first meet. The first meet will be Wednesday at the Concordia Inn, when the Hawks will clash with teams like Illinois State, Purdue and Eastern Illinois runners up in the nation last year. "It that have each team will be allowed to enter two wrestlers at each weight class, the reason being is to let usable wrestlers or "redshirts" a chance to wrestle.

The first meet is probably the hardest meet until the national finals in early March. But Coach Norm Lovelace doesn't see this as a problem, though he said, "The meet will be good experience for us. It may come out of it with some bumps, but our presence will be felt. Usually we get off to a slow start but as the season progresses we gain momentum and pass everyone at the end." Lovelace's record speaks for itself, in six years as Harper's wrestling coach he has sent over 20 wrestlers to nationals, he has built a national qualifier, and he has compiled an undefeated record of 77 wins against only 20 losses.

One of the biggest improvements in the wrestling facilities the squad has been success from Billie U. Blig, Ill. There they have their own wrestling room, a 600-sq-ft wrestling room, a 600-sq-ft wrestling room, and a steam room which will aid the squad in last day weight cutting.

Taking in account the size of the team, present attitude, and past record, the Harper wrestling squad seems to have things going their way.

Soccer signs off

by MIKE BAMBACH

They started out with one soccer ball and set out to conquer the N.J.A.A. soccer world.

But the Harper Hawks, winners of the Region 4 tourney a week previous, had their feathers plucked of such a dream when they fell to Macomb, Mich. 4-1, in the opening round of the N.J.A.A. Midwest Regional.

Fourteenth-ranked Lewis & Clark, which had defeated Harper 4-1, for the Illinois state title, was upset by unranked Macomb, Mich., 2-1, in the opening round match.

Against all odds Harper dominated the early stages of the game but still could not score. A fact that would plague them throughout the game.

At 12:30 into the first half, Hawk striker Andy Bobowski slipped past the Macomb defense, literally unnoticed, with a one-on-one opportunity against Macomb goalie Ed Sarmulski. But Bobowski aimed his shot too high as it sailed off over the Macomb goal. It turned out to be the key in the game.

"I knew when Andy missed that shot that it would hurt us," said Hawk coach Sander Stabe. "We made three technical mistakes," Stabe added, "but Andy's miss hurt the most."

The Hawks met two "technical" mistakes. Both led to Macomb goals. With only 1:30 left in go to the first half, Mike Dredzich drilled a direct kick past Hawk goalie Steve Todd to give Macomb a 1-0 first half lead.

"He Todd made a mistake lining up the wall on that play," said Stabe.

With 34 gone in the second half, the Hawks committed their third blunder. Dredzich, again, scored on a six-yarder after he had been left to himself in front of the Hawk goal. Ten minutes later, Macomb's Rick Christmann scored on a six-foot header from inside the Hawk goal zone giving the Monarchs a 3-0 lead that would hold to the end.

"We played them even up, but just made those three key mistakes," said a disappointed Stabe. "We're just aren't in their class yet," he noted.

The loss ended the Hawks' first soccer season. The Hawks finished with a 1-1-0 record while boasting two N.J.A.A. All-American nominees, striker Steve Berry and goalie Todd Todd.

Todd allowed only 11 goals in the Hawks' 17 matches for a goals against average of 1.96, while Berry led the Hawks in goals with 13 goals this year. "This is not too bad for a team that started the season with no home field, no goal posts, and just one soccer ball."

FERC comes up with new evaluation

by MIKE SIMIUS

"What are the major strengths and weaknesses of this instructor? What do you suggest to improve this course?"

The above questions can be found in the newly developed student faculty evaluations. The survey will ask questions about the student's feelings and attitudes toward classes and teachers. Its intent is to help the faculty to correct mistakes made during the class, and will help the faculty to know what helped the student grasp the course objectives. The new evaluation was developed by a committee made up of one dean, two associate deans, seven faculty, and the students. The committee was headed up by Harper teacher, Robert Boeke. The committee met seven or eight times to discuss possible questions and problems that have been inherent in past faculty evaluations.

Last spring Harper paid an estimated 20 cents per evaluation which came to 80 cents to 90 cents when all costs were added in. The new evaluation will cost 2 cents per evaluation, saving the college money in these continuous times. The previously used University of Illinois (U of I) survey was not accepted by a majority of teachers as an adequate testing tool, Boeke said.

The purpose of the evaluation is to get student feedback which is important in all phases of teaching. If a teacher does get a 'bad' evaluation, that teacher will have to talk over conflicts or problems with the teacher's supervisor, Boeke said.

The teacher will be able to give many evaluations to many classes unlike the U of I survey which a teacher would give to only one class. In this way the teacher armed with the new survey will get a better perspective of their class problems and class strong points. The survey proved to be a success in many classes last year when teachers who volunteered gave the survey to students, Boeke said. "Many teachers feel that if a student does not sign or will sign the evaluation, the evaluation is meaningless. What good are the evaluations to the student? When the student fills out the survey, the semester is almost over, if not over entirely. And, should a teacher get a bad evaluation, the college if operating correctly, will stop the matter."

Evaluation survey stirs controversy

by MIKE BAMBUR
DOW McFELIN

Last week's announcement that the Harbinger was sponsoring a student evaluation of the faculty on campus caused more than a mild upset among some members of the faculty, administration, and student activities office.

Various charges were made against the validity of the Harbinger evaluation, as well as its right to publish such information.

In a letter received by the Harbinger Dr. David Williams, vice president of Academic Affairs, stated that the Harbinger had printed incorrect information to the effect that there would be no formal evaluations on campus this semester. He later expressed his dismay that the Harbinger had not contacted him before publishing the evaluation.

The Harbinger, however, had contacted Dr. Williams' office prior to publishing its evaluation in order to confirm reports that there would not be an evaluation offered this semester. A Harbinger reporter was instructed by Dr. Williams' office to contact Bob Cormack, Dean of the Career Program, using division Dr. Cormack's office. In turn, instructed the Harbinger to contact Linda Wagner, Dean of Instructional Services. Ms. Wagner informed the Harbinger that the evaluations that were approved by the Faculty Evaluation Review Committee (FERC) were being printed at the present time for on-campus scoring, and would not be available for use until next semester.

Dr. Williams was critical of the Harbinger survey, saying that his biggest concern was the possibility of obtaining a biased sampling from the students.

Williams was, however, positive in his attitude on faculty evaluations in general. In his letter to the Harbinger, Williams stated, "Input from students is critical in the assessment of the instructional process." He added that, "Given the experience that our faculty and administration have had over the history of Harper, it is felt that our currently approved system is valid and reliable and will provide the most important output of any faculty evaluation system, namely a process for the improvement of instruction."

William Miller, president of the Harper College Faculty Senate said of the Harbinger faculty evaluation, "I think it's horrid... It's the stupidest thing I've ever heard of." He added that faculty evaluation in general serve no useful purpose in his eyes because of the politics involved. It is his opinion that students are not capable of giving an honest evaluation of a teacher, and that the evaluation received is based almost entirely on the grade the student receives in class. Miller also said that he does not believe in the concept of merit pay, and that teacher salaries should be based entirely on objective criteria such as position, number of years with the school, tenure, and so on.

Robert Powell, chairman of the English Department at Harper said that evaluations in general are "very biased, only 20 percent of the students participate in an evaluation. Eighty percent of the students are neutral in an evaluation. It's the other 20 percent who feel very strongly either for or against a teacher that will give response. Students want good grades and if they don't get them they become very bitter."

Members of the Student Senate also were upset at the Harbinger for the evaluations. Bruce Zamca, Student Trustee said, "The idea of a student evaluation is a good in theory, but in practice, it cannot work because there are no controls." He, along with some members of the Student Senate, complained that the Harbinger did not inform the Senate of its intent to publish the evaluation, and thus created problems concerning the Senate's action to get student evaluations re-instituted in the college.

In a letter sent by the Student Senate to William Miller, faculty senate president, Dale Markey stated, "We do believe that the intent of the Harbinger was not to malign the faculty, but that there was a sincere attempt to hear part to give the students back their voice in the faculty evaluation system."

"Although we do not accept responsibility for this particular action, the Student Senate feels that there is a need for an effective faculty evaluation system."

There were a number of positive comments from among the faculty also. A psychology teacher who asked to not be identified said that "the 'the Harbinger faculty evaluation is an excellent idea as long as you can get an appropriate number of responses. Mary Jo White, an instructor in the speech and theater department said, "In theory, I think that the evaluation is an excellent idea, but I don't think that a newspaper is the best way to go about it."

Assistant Professor of Anthropology Charles Norris said, "I don't disagree with what you did, but how you did it. What will stop the public from filling them [the Harbinger evaluations] out?"

Norris added, "I know some of my colleagues who are going to crucify the Harbinger for what they have done."

A number of teachers around campus have passed the forms out in class in an effort to ease a stronger response.

McGrath appoints new acting deans

Two acting appointments in the student affairs office have been announced by President McGrath's office. From Stansbury and Anne Rodgers will be to achieve greater articulation between Harper and universities.

Ms. Rodgers is also a veteran at Harper. Rodgers has worked since 1969 in the student development area. Ms. Rodgers is replacing James Powell who resigned earlier this year. Ms. Rodgers, who considers her new position a challenge, will be responsible for counseling, community counseling and testing. Among Ms. Rodgers' immediate concerns are spring semester scheduling and vacancies in the counseling department.

Both positions will be approved by the board of trustees at the board's regular meeting on Dec. 13. It is not known at this point what will happen with the positions next fall.

Mr. Stansbury, former Director of Admissions and Registration, is taking the place of Dr. Gavett A. Fischer who is on leave of absence. This is the second time Mr. Stansbury has taken an acting deanship. Stansbury was instrumental in the planning and opening of Harper and has worked within the college since its genesis. Stansbury will be responsible for overseeing admissions and registration, environmental health, recruitment, student activities and student development. "I feel very

Administrator speaks out on faculty evaluations

Dear Editor
In the November 19, 1979, edition of The Harbinger, an article by Don McHugh and an editorial on the topic of Faculty Evaluation appeared which I feel requires a response from my office.
I fully agree with your position that our faculty is the most important aspect of our instructional process. I would further add that input from students is critical in the assessment of this process.

My major concern with the editorial is the statement, "This semester, however, will have its evaluation forms to fill out and rate their various teachers." This is an inaccurate statement and needs clarification.

During the 1978-79 academic year, the Faculty Evaluation Review Committee (FERC) undertook some major revisions in the faculty evaluation system. Incidentally, there were two students who participated on this committee. A major recommendation of the committee, which was approved by the Administration, was to adopt a new instrument for collecting student opinions of instruction. I've attached a copy of the instrument that has been adopted (our plan has been for each faculty to administer this instrument after mid-term of each semester to a minimum of 30-40 students.

The reason that they have not been administered as yet this semester is that we are having them printed for year-end scoring. Because of this delay, a format which will be hand scored will be available to faculty the first week of December. This instrument was "field tested" last Spring in over 30 sections and received positive comments from faculty and students.

Given the experience that our faculty and administration have had over the history of Harper, it is felt that our currently approved system is valid, reliable and will provide the most important output of any faculty evaluation system, namely a process for the improvement of instruction.

Sincerely,
David L. Williams,

Student cuts down Harbinger evaluations

I consider the "Teacher Evaluation" being conducted by the Harbinger to be in very poor taste. Besides being extremely lacking in validity, it would only create bitterness among the teachers. How would the students like to have their grade point averages publicly announced? But of course this is unheard of, the law prevents this. Also, wouldn't it look very childish if the teachers were to stage a similar "Student Evaluation" campaign? Probably most would say that it isn't being very objective!

LaVanway expresses concern over Harper faculty evaluations

I am writing this letter in regards to your article and editorial concerning the faculty evaluation system here at Harper. As a member of the Student Senate it is our job to see that the students have a forum in which to voice their opinions on the quality of their faculty. Since 1973 this forum has been the faculty evaluation forms that are released to faculty on an optional basis at the end of each semester. However, these past semesters have found the availability of faculty submitting to this process waning. This responsibility lies with the members of past senates who have not properly represented the students on past faculty evaluation review committees. As members of the Student Senate we are greatly concerned with this deteriorating system of faculty evaluation; consequently, we have been negotiating with the administration to see that the system of faculty evaluation and its corollary the Faculty Evaluation Review Committee be reinstated under favorable terms for all parties involved. The process of faculty evaluation is much more complex than just asking some questions and tabulating the results; consideration must be given to the forum in which the questions are stated, the phrasing of the questions, etc. I am of the belief that there exists an honest concern, on the part of the paper, that the students deserve some representative voice in the evaluation of their faculty. It is to this end that we, the Student Senate, are working. I am asking that the Harbinger evaluate its system for faculty evaluation that it has now instigated and that it work with us in seeing the reformation of the Faculty Evaluation Review committee.

Thank You,
Michael LaVanway

Lockwood supports people of Cambodia

Letter to the Harbinger:
The people of Cambodia, sometimes referred to as "the poorest people on earth," are caught up in a terrible power struggle and are dying for lack of food and medicine. It is believed that between 2 and 3 million of her 7 million people have died from starvation, illness and gunfire. In U.S. terms, this would be the equivalent of everyone from the Mississippi River to the Atlantic. Eighty per cent of Cambodia's children are suffering from extreme malnutrition. Most of the seed rice has had to be eaten and less than 3 per cent of the rice lands are under cultivation.
While the immediate suffering is caused by military forces backed by Russia and China, it's important to remember that toward the end of the war in Vietnam, U.S.

planes dropped more bombs and defoliants on this tiny country that were used in the entire second World War. So there's plenty of blame to go around.
Of the many agencies that are airlifting food and medical supplies into Cambodia, those three I know to be responsible and effective. They are in a position to act on behalf of all members of the Harper faculty and student body who wish to contribute to this terribly urgent relief effort. ## Student Senate drops Lawson appoints Elias to Life Sciences

In action taken at their Nov. 30 meeting, the Student Senate decided to remove Mike Lawson from the board.

Based on the Student Senate constitution, which states that any member who misses two students' senate meetings without a valid excuse can be dropped from the Student Senate, Lawson had missed all but one meeting.

Lawson, who was the student representative for the Physical Education, Athletic, and Recreation Division, was elected unopposed in the Sept. 27 and 28 elections held on campus. Applications are now being taken in the Student Senate office for those who wish to fill the vacant position. Applicants must be a declared major in the Physical Education department. If no applicants from the Physical Education department that are qualified to fill the position are found, then a student from the student body will be appointed. In other action taken by the Student Senate, they approved the appointment of Lena Elias, a sophomore Lab Tech major to fill the Life and Health Services Division position on the board. This position has been vacant since the September election because there had been no candidates at that time. According to Mark Comeaux, president of the Student Senate, "We felt that Lena was the best qualified of the four applicants we had. She had previously been involved in the program board, and the radio station, and seems aware of the work involved in student government. We think she will work well with the Student Senate."

Car poolers look to next semester

by PETE WICKLUND

Officials of Harper College's car pool board are unsure of the exact results of the success of the car pool effort at Harper this semester.

The Harbinger called George Dorrer, Associate Dean of Engineering/Physical Sciences, who is one of Harper's staff involved with the car pool effort, after word arrived that a similar effort at Illinois Central College had failed. Dorrer said that because of limited funds they were only able to set up the program but not check results. Approximately 110 students expressed interest in the car pool effort but after computer print outs of prospective riders were posted the riders were on their own to set up their own car pools.

Dorrer and his colleagues are presently working on a system for the spring semester. Dorrer said that he is "much more hopeful" of better success for the spring semester. "People are more conscious of the problem now," Dorrer said. Among possible ideas the car pool board is working on is a system in which car pool applications would be sent out with all grade reports. This way Dorrer feels, more people will become aware of the project. Another possibility is the setting up of computer terminals with pool information at spring registration. Dorrer is hopeful that people will give up some of their "inhabitant ideas" in order to save money and gas.

Students present legal problems

There are a variety of legal problems that are presented by the students, said Mr. Tom Shannon, attorney for Harper students, who has been with Harper for 3 years.

The basic categories of problems are in the areas of "landlord-tenant disputes, general contract problems, real estate matters, traffic matters and injury matters," he said. "We maintain full confidentiality," he stressed.

From time-to-time there are a number of nominal contract disputes presented where a student as a tenant and a landlord wants to evict him immediately or the student has signed a contract to purchase something and the realtor has canceled the contract.

In those instances, "simply by making a phone call, we have been able to resolve the problems without litigation, no missed time on the students' parts or attorneys' fees," said Shannon.

On occasion, the student who comes in just wants simple advice or wants to know what rights he/she has in a specific situation.

If there are disputes, sometimes they can be resolved, other times it necessitates additional action.

"When additional action is needed," Shannon said, "I try to put the students in touch with that division of the court system which allows certain cases to be brought to court without an attorney."

"In Cook County, that division of the court system is the Prose court," he explained.

"In the case of a more involved legal matter, under the agreement I have with Harper, the student may request that I handle the matter outside of Harper or may choose whatever attorney he desires.

Shannon has been practicing law for six years, since his graduation in 1973 from Loyola University Law School in Chicago.

For students who want free legal advice, he is available on Wednesday afternoons from 1-4 p.m. in the Student Activities Office.

It is best to call in advance, exit 202 or stop in the office.

He also has two offices, one in the Chicago Loop, 100 N. Wacker and the other in Mt. Prospect, 701 W. Golf Rd.

Peer counselors offer a helping hand to students

by WENDY WINKEBAKE

"We can understand people. We're here to give moral support, help or just to talk." This is the job of the peer counselor as explained by freshman Jean Money. The twelve peer counselors are stationed on the second floor of Bldg. A next to the bookstore.

These peer counselors serve as a liaison between the students and the counseling staff in addition to the administrative guidance of Bruce Bohrer, each peer counselor is assigned to a professional counselor throughout the academic year. The professional counselor can offer advice and insight into problems the peer counselor may encounter.

"They serve as a liaison between the counseling staff and the student body. They help us reach out to the student," Bohrer emphasized. "A lot of people come to me but we hire only once a year in the fall." On the average, the center is staffed with 12 counselors.

Each person wishing to become a peer counselor must take a 75 point 30 question test dealing with the various aspects of Harper. Questions on the test range from the degrees offered at Harper to where certain areas are located. It covers the basic information that all students should know but may be a bit "buzzy" about.

"I enjoy helping people. A lot of people are so confused. We grow too. We learn about ourselves," Miss Money commented.

Upon completing the test, prospective peer counselors enter a mandatory training program. This program involves practicing communication, attention and listening skills with role playing as a background.

"It's a very intensive program. We spend a lot of time going over Harper policies, rules and so on and then concentrate on communication skills," Bohrer said. "Basically what they try to do is be good listeners. They're not counselors by any means. Sometimes listening is all a student needs."

Currently the Peer Counseling Center is open from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. daily with counselors available at all times. Bohrer suggests extending the office hours to accommodate the needs of night students as well as day students. This would call for justifying the extension with the budget. Peer counseling is funded through Student Development. Bohrer cites the center as a place for people to chat, hear about people, and college in general.

Students who serve as peer counselors have a chance of receiving credit in lieu of money for their services. "Usually there is more interest in money. Up to last year everyone was paid," Bohrer added.

Bohrer's job is to be the administrative link of the operation together in addition to serving as a sort of "soundboard" for the counselors.

"He's kind of like our father," Miss Money laughed. "He's an all right guy," reaffirmed Greg Bohrer, a peer counseling veteran.

Peer counselors may not be able to help with complicated problems the student has but they can offer assistance whether referring them to a specific office or just listening. "We're here to help students in any way we can. They know they're limited to what they can do," concluded Bohrer.

'Heads' win album of the year hands down

"Everyone is trying to get to the bar. The music of the bar is called Heads. The band in heaven plays my favorite song. They play it once again, they play it all night long." That is just one verse from the new Talking Heads LP "Fear of Music." This is my choice for album of the year, 1979.

"Talking Heads received notoriety with an appearance on "Saturday Night Live" and with national airplay of Al Green's "Take Me to the River." With this album Talking Heads should reach superstar status in the dismay of their cult following in the nation's colleges and cities.

"Time won't change you. Money won't change you. I haven't got the faintest idea. Everything seems to be up in the air at this time." This song "Road" features a David Byrne vocal pleading and at times questioning the listener. The driving bass with an unorthodoxly tight rhythmic section make this song like the other Talking Heads songs danceable but not danceable in the effect of disco's philosophy of "party 'til you puke," but more like the Doors, Who, or early Beatles material.

"I'm mad, and that's a fact. I found out, animals don't help. Animals think they're pretty smart - shit on the ground, see us in the dark." This is from "Animals," depicting the sad notion that animals actually have it easy. Animals do have to worry about food and animals have the people fooled who do not think animals worry. The vocal is overpowering, lingering on in memory long after the music stops.

"Did I forget to mention, forget to mention Memphis Home of Elvis and the ocean; Greeks do I smell? I smell home cooking. It's only the river if it only the river." In this song "Cities," in which the vocal line contradicts the lyrics, the singer will never find his city.

In a year of good songs it is rare to find an LP consistent in quality of production and tight music-making. Sure there are many good LPs, but too many are made with the idea of money, how much a song or LP can sell. Talking Heads philosophy is, "We do what we want and if it sells that is ok, if the public likes it ok, but we go into songwriting with us in mind." Talking Heads fans like the Heads because they play music which is not punk, but is simple, Melody and harmony are elementary and are humbling. The rhythm section is a close knit unit. Unusual for any band, as the fact the female bass player and male drummer are married, which may explain the precision. The interpersonal and behavioral psychology inherent in the majority of material indicates a thought out product. The lyrics makes you think, and makes you keep on thinking until you figure it out, reminiscent of Dylan.

And finally, a perfect example of the future of music.

Thinking Rock, this called "Air": "Air, Air - Hit me in the face - I run faster - faster into the air - I say to myself: What is happening to my skin? - Where is that protection that I need? - Air can hurt you too - Some people say not to worry about the Air - Air - It can break your heart! So remember when the weather gets rough - You'll say to yourself: What is happening to my skin? - Where is that protection that I need? - Air can hurt you too - Some people say not to worry about the Air - Some people don't know's + + + about the Air - Air, Air."

Winter: a time for fun, tradition, sport and flu

With winter upon us, the public gears themselves up for the special traditions that this season season brings. Along with the special holidays arrive the outdoor activities that are so popular in the snow covered landscape.

Milk and fresh products provide Vitamin D to prevent calcium loss. Over a period of time, loss of calcium leads to weakened bones.

Along with vitamins the experts add: "Stay away from refined carbohydrates - sugars, sweets and junk foods; they burn up vitamins and prevent our body chemistry and depletes the immune system.

The immune system has to have important nutritional elements in order to work and if None the less, wintertime is the season for colds and flu. Your body must equip itself to be resistant against illness.

Dr. Wilbur Currier, world renowned nutrition expert, states in the National Enquirer: "In the wintertime, because of the cold, we need more nutritional elements and dietary supplements than under ordinary conditions." Dr. Currier, along with two other experts, suggest adults take these winter vitamin dosages: vitamins A, B-complex, C, D, and E. Along with these vitamins, you should eat more high fiber, less processed food and more of certain fats.

Along with Dr. Currier are two other experts, Dr. Richard A. Kohn, Professor University of California Medical School and Dr. Robert Atkins, nutritionist, New York City. These feelings are reflected in the following:

"Vitamin A protects your mucus membranes against smog, soot and cold air that preventing congestion due to colds.

"B-complex is fundamental to all the metabolic processes. It helps you to get energy to keep warm.

"Most of the best giving reactions in the body are governed by B-complex vitamins. B-complex are important for stress loads of all kinds especially the cold of winter.

"Vitamins C and E are needed to protect the body against infection disorders. But C is so important because fresh fruit and vegetables are not so available - you must supplement your Vitamin C intake.

Houses symbolize children, creative expression

"Dear Juli, I am a male student here at Harper, and I am wondering what field I am best suited for? I am thinking of teaching, psychology, or even politics. What do you think?"

My observation of this chart immediately brought my attention to a group of planets within the fifth house which symbolize children, creative self-expression, and speculation. The planets located here represent a great deal of personal energy directed towards these things.

The Sun, in the sign Virgo, represents an analytical, practical, intellectual type of personality. You are active, adaptable social, lively and quickwitted. The Moon in

Astro Awareness

By JULI REALY

Geminis indicates many interests, changeable emotions, aloofness, and a need to communicate with others. It seems that you have a great potential for intelligence, creativity, and charisma. Others may recognize your leadership potentials.

This brief personality sketch reveals the possibility of such technical abilities may be practically applied to research in fields such as solar energy, atomic energy or astronomy. Engineering, stock market analysis, investment, promotional activities, insurance and taxes may also bring you success.

Natural healing ability is indicated in your chart, and this is a talent not many possess. I highly recommend for you to feel this could be extremely satisfying to you, since it involves analysis, research, a bit of the mysterious, social contact, and financial security, which seems to be an underlying motive.

Teaching, which involves creative communication, leadership, and motivational abilities would suit you very well also. Dealing with children is highlighted in your chart and should come naturally to you. This would be an excellent career choice and would give you personal and emotional satisfaction. With your creative resourcefulness, you may want to consider related fields such as researching new teaching methods.

Psychology should attract you, as would other fields delving into the abstract and unknown. Your capabilities would be put to very good use. You should consider specifically child psychology. The only consideration that must be made on your part before pursuing this field, is that of how other people's moods affect your own psyche. It appears from your chart that you may be very receptive and sensitive to the moods of others, and that their moods may affect you. If this is the case, it would take some effort on your part, to not let it affect your performance. With your willpower and self-discipline, you may be able to overcome this.

Your humanitarian and social concerns would be well applied to the political scene, as your charisma and leadership abilities would work beneficially for you. You would probably find public service gratifying. However, the attention you may be feeling now may begin to wane in several years, and your interests in achieving worldly success and power may be refocused and directed more toward personal gain.

Could you put up with the pressures and controls that politics involve? Your chart indicates that you could, but this pursuit would definitely involve personal and emotional adjustment for you. You may find yourself frustrated.

Next year, you may begin to experience changes in your philosophies, beliefs and moral outlook on life, and it will probably affect your career choice.

At this point, I am glad you are pursuing an education, because you certainly are endowed with a gifted mind. My recommendation to you before you dedicate yourself to any one career, is to thoroughly investigate all potentials and decide what you want out of life—personal and emotional satisfaction, or financial, worldly success. Good Luck!

Hypnotist casts spell over subjects and audience

by LORILYNN GUY

A fairly large crowd watched Hypnotist Larry Garrett mesmerize ten Harper students. Garrett, who has been here the past four years, made these students become performers, children, and inanimate objects.

Garrett started off his demonstration by explaining how hypnosis works and what it does to you. When he asked for volunteers, half the crowd raised their hands. The 30 chairs filled fast by whoever could not quibble to the stage. Garrett began the hypnosis by relaxing all. He then convinced the students to do many things.

The students were told their chairs were uncomfortable so they scrambled for new ones. They were convinced that it was cold so they huddled very close together, considering that they were all total strangers at the beginning of the session. The audience laughed at Steve Martin, Richard Pryor and Olivia Newton-John imitations by the hypnotized students. The audience applauded the reactions of the men who thought their papers came down every time their names were called.

The hypnotized students seemed to have enjoyed the magic paper best. With this paper, they thought that they could see the audience naked.

The audience started to believe it as if they were the ones hypnotized. When the students woke up, they remembered everything. Most of them thought it was quite funny but a few were slightly embarrassed. Garrett says that he enjoys doing demonstrations a college and especially to the applause of a smiling audience.

B-Ball tough in opening games

by JOE RUSEK

Watching the Harper basketball team last Tuesday night and watching them in previous games, was like seeing the difference between night and day.

The Hawks, showing a 3-3 record going into the game, had romped over Oakton and had an easy time with the Lewis JV. Their three losses came at the hands of some of the top rated teams from Missouri, even then playing the two squads close.

In all the earlier games it was controlling the boards and opening up the fast break to keep Harper close, but against the Kougars of Kishwaukee rebounding was one of the keys. The Hawks let Kishwaukee have too many second, third, and sometimes even fourth and fifth chances in losing 55-78, on Harper's home court.

"Harper didn't play as well as they are capable of playing from the times I've seen them. I've been watching the NAC playoff close and I feel Harper should finish in the top half of its conference this year," said Kishwaukee coach Jim Venkat.

"We knew we had to control the boards, to seal off Harper if we wanted to win."

"I'm very disappointed in us going up 35 points, our defensive average going into the game was 68," said a disgruntled Harper coach Roger Bechtold.

"We showed a lack of hand strength and just a lack of intensity. I haven't been depressed about our play this season until our game today."

The Hawks had a 39-33 halftime lead and upped that to 62-22 early in the second half.

But lack of rebounding finally caught up with Harper as Kishwaukee quickly came back, getting baskets by way of the twilight zone or dumping in rebound shots underneath. Kishwaukee reeled off 13 unanswered points to jump to a 56-48 lead as the Hawks had trouble breaking the Kougars defense.

"They made a couple of shots and we couldn't gain momentum again," said Bechtold, after his team dropped to 24 overall. "The only positive thing was that we came back with intensity."

Harper staged a rally of its own late in the game but couldn't sustain it. The Hawks pulled within one, 51-49, with three minutes left, on buckets by Mike Bayless, Craig Kavinis, and Tim Logan. But, Kishwaukee nailed its straight points to put the game away. Harper had four players in double figures leading scorer for the Hawks in the loss was Jeff Martindale, again hot from the corners, good for 18 points. Logan pumped in 14 and Kavinis and Bayless added 12 points apiece.

In the Harper Classic, over the Thanksgiving break the Hawks finished second.

In their first home game ever at Big M, the Hawks raced past Lewis 79-57. After being outscored at 34-21 in the first half, the Hawks outscored Lewis 45-21 in the second half to win its first home game of the season. Harper was led by Hawkins in the second half as Hawkins hit for 14 of his 18 total points in the second period.

Chris Hissak came off of the bench and poured in 14 points to give the Hawks more offense. Also, hitting in double figures were Logan with 17 and Martinsk dropped in 14.

In the championship game, Harper had a rematch with Meramec, a team they had lost to a week earlier at Meramec. Take away the last few seconds of the championship game and it would have been a completely different story. Meramec, one of the top rated junior college teams in the Midwest, had to fight for their lives in various sections and end the Hawks' winning streak at one.

The lead changed hands 15 times in the second half. Craig Chapek of Harper nailed a jumper with 24 seconds left to tie the game up. Meramec calculated nine seconds remaining to set up its final shot.

Meramec's Greg Midden hit a lay-up underneath at :02 and Harper was down by one. Midden calmly sank the two free throws to give Meramec its sixth straight win.

Guard Tim Logan and forward Craig Rawlins were named to the All-Conference team. In the consolation game Lake County defeated Lewis 81-74.

The Monday before, Nov. 19, the Hawks totally blew Chatham out of the court, racking up an easy 108-76 victory. The 100 points by Harper set a new single game scoring record by

The Hawks in a game. The previous high was when they defeated Illinois Valley, 105-82, during the 1977-78 campaign.

"We were able to better on the boards and that helped generate our fast break. We switched from a man-to-man to our match-up zone defense. We still have to eliminate our turnovers to be a better ballclub," said Bechtold. The Hawks led at halftime 55-41, then just poured it on the away with the win. Rawlins was the big gun, putting 28 points through the nets. Logan accounted for 18, Martinsk had 16 in his court, Rob Dorsey added 12 and Pirazak put in 10 for the winners.

The Hawks will now travel to our match-up zone defense. We still have to eliminate our turnovers to be a better ballclub," said Bechtold. The Hawks led at halftime 55-41, then just poured it on the

ASU student stirs controversy over coach's abuse

On Oct. 28, 1978 Arizona State University punter Kevin Rutledge returned to the sidelines after his last kick of a game against the University of Washington. There's some dispute about what happened next. Rutledge says ASU head football coach Frank Kush "assaulted" him by shoving a hand under Rutledge's face mask, and then trying to land an uppercut. Kush and others who run ASU football deny it.

New Rutledge is taking Kush, a living legend on the Southwest, to court. Taking a revenge figure like Kush, whose coaching skills have made Arizona State into a national football power, to court would be a radical act in itself in Arizona. But Rutledge's action, in the words of ASU Athletic Director Fred Miller, presents a "danger to the entire coaching profession," presumably because it could alter the ill-defined legal relationship between players and coaches. The issue revolves around player-coach relationships that sometimes turn as violent as football.

Rutledge's accusations of coach violence are only the most recent, public ones. In December 1978, Ohio State coach Woody Hayes punched a Clemson player on national television during the Carter Bowl. Hayes, who had been involved in violent incidents before with reporters and his own players, was fired after the Carter Bowl. Just last month Michigan coach Bo Schembecher allegedly shoved a student reporter around the locker room when the student asked about the need to recruit a new kicker for the team.

Neither the Clemson player nor the student reporter took action against the coaches. Until Rutledge, few have actually filed formal accusations. One reason is that when incidents of coaches physically abusing players do occur, they typically happen on semi-private practice fields, and are generally accepted as a regrettable but normal part of a violent game.

Lee Brock, a former University of Washington player who played under Kush in the now East-West game, says coaches often tell players that if they can't take the punishment they will probably fail in other facets of life. Coaches "use tough techniques to make behavior modifications, to make 'players' men."

The extraordinary success of some legendary "tough" coaches like Vince Lombardi, Paul Brown and Knute Rockne, Brock calls "a very intense person" may also help convince players to accept physical abuse quietly. Though "tough" training techniques are not necessarily synonymous with coaches physically abusing athletes. Players who do want to complain about abuse don't have established grievance procedures. NCAA attorney Bob Minix says his organization—of which Arizona State is a member—normally can't help a player. "A coach abusing a player on or off the field is not within our jurisdiction. It's not a violation of our rules. It should be handled through the courts or in-house."

Indeed, Rutledge's lawyer, Robert O. Haag, filed the ASU controversy with a six-page, "in-house" complaint first with the Arizona Board of Regents early this fall. The complaint said Kush and assistant coach William Mazkik "harrassed" Rutledge into quitting the team, that Kush "assaulted" Rutledge during the ASU-Washington game in Seattle last year, and that both coaches deceived Rutledge concerning "redshirt" or non-playing reserve status during that time.

The regents rejected the complaint five days later. On Sept. 17, Haag went to Phoenix to file the same charges as part of a $1.1 million civil suit. The suit also charged Kush, assistants Mazkik and Gary Horton, and the regents with conducting a "cover up" of the alleged harassment campaign.

A steady stream of "no comment" replies from spokespersons for both sides as they scramble for an advantage, though Haag doesn't expect a trial for "at least a year."

But in football mad Tempe, the conflict has already become a major topic of conversation. The tone of the conversation keeps getting hotter, too. The Rutledge family has endured continuous threats through the mail and over the phone since Haag filed the first complaint Sept. 5. They've had to get an unlisted home number, and to put their Phoenix home under 24-hour surveillance.

Those weren't idle precautions. Several hours after news of the complaint was released on Sept. 1, a fire broke out in the insurance office of Gordon Rutledge, Kevin's father. The fire, which was started in three separate spots in the office, caused $60,000 in damage. Police are investigating arson.

But the case is getting hotter anyway. The ASU State Press published accounts of a tape recording on which some football players claim ASU coaches supplied them with pre-written statements denying they'd seen Kush shove Rutledge. One player on the tape reportedly saw the incident, but signed the statement because "my future, my education depends on this. Kush has so much pull. There's a lot I have to worry about."

It's difficult to measure the effect all the controversy is having on Kush, the athletic department, or the team, which is carrying on an uncharacteristically mediocre season. But Athletic Director Fred Miller has called Rutledge's charges "malicious untruths from a dishonored student-athlete." He added the assault charges are "categorically untrue," claiming he has statements from the coaches, players and trainers proving Kush's and Mazkik's innocence.

Evaluations draw minimal response

by DON McHUGH

The results of the Harbinger's fall 1979 faculty evaluations are in. A total of 184 responses were received by the Harbinger office in the three weeks that the survey was made available to students, making it a less than accurate sampling of student opinion of faculty on campus.

The results show a number of significant facts about teachers, however, and about the student body also.

Students showed almost as much interest in the faculty evaluations as they did in the September student senate elections in which less than one percent of students participated.

These responses, however, for the most part were legitimate comments on teachers, negating fears of the administration and faculty that students with an "ax to grind" against a particular teacher would attempt to malign that teacher's reputation by submitting numerous evaluations chastising the teacher. The Harbinger found only one such example.

The results also showed that students are indeed capable of forming and giving an intelligent opinion of classroom techniques.

When the evaluation was first printed in the Nov. 20 issue of the Harbinger, there were numerous complaints from faculty administrators and some students, stating that an evaluation done by a newspaper could not be a valid sampling. Prominent members of the faculty went as far as to say that no evaluation done by students could be regarded as legitimate.

Others contended that evaluations are an important and integral part of the assessment of the instructional process, including Dave Williams, vice-president of student affairs.

The Harper administration had gone as far as to drop evaluations altogether at one point last year, stating in increased costs forced the cut back.

The Student Senate has been working this year to get formal evaluations reinstated in the college and has been successful in getting an evaluation form out to some students to be filled out on an optional basis.

The evaluation system, which is being passed out to random classes by some teachers, was created by the Faculty Evaluation Review Committee (FERC), composed of one administrator, faculty and students.

The good....

Contrary to fears of the administration and faculty that the Harbinger evaluations would serve as a rebuke for students to vent their frustrations against teachers, there were a number of positive responses, eulogizing teachers brought forth.

Students brought forth the fact that some of the faculty members on campus are among the best to be found anywhere.

Of Accounting instructor James Patton one student said, "All in structure should use lessons from Patton. He is fair, his grading is accurate, and lectures are fun and interesting. The best!"

Dr. Marshall of the Life and Health Sciences Division was rated as "an excellent instructor, open-minded to suggestions, thorough in her presentation, accurate and interesting in her lectures." Other students were just as direct in their praise of teachers. "Greg Naples is a fantastic teacher. His class is very, very interesting."

Jack Gallagher is an excellent teacher with a great sense of humor. His lectures are very organized.

Another student commented on Asst. Professor Patricia Smith-Purvis. "She is a great for teaching students in the class. More teachers like her would make college a much more rewarding experience."

Dr. Mary Jo Wilton a student commented, "She makes learning a joy for me. She is an extremely motivating teacher, very human."

Stan Stewart, sociology professor, "Stewart is probably one of the top five faculty members here on Harper's campus. If you don't believe me take one of his classes."

One student commented on Dr. Owen, physics and instructor. He could teach anybody how to draw, organized manner. The course is structured in such a way that the student develops into a competent artist by the end of the course, whether you are planning to go into art, or just want to learn how to draw."

Other students made comments on the quality of faculty on campus in general. Said one student on campus, "I am a 22 year old student and have been in two previous four year universities and I feel that the caliber of teachers is as high as anywhere."

The bad....

Students who submitted evaluations during the past three weeks to the Harbinger offered a number of constructive criticisms concerning faculty performance on campus.

Students complained about lack of organization of classroom lectures, profanity in class, and lack of interest on the part of the instructor.

One student complained that his instructor was "a tuition ripoff. I wanted to learn but nothing is being taught. This course is equivalent to fourth grade or Cub Scouts."

Other students complained about the amount of course work. "Even for the best students, the amount of course material presented in the short time allowed was mind-boggling. Perhaps the course should be offered over two semesters," one student suggested.

Complaints as to the preparation and involvement of the teacher in class were numerous. "This teacher hasn't read the book prior to class, no supplemental material is offered, and there is no class discussion."

Another student said, "The teacher has had been in class nine times. The rest of the semester we have been on our own."

One student complained about the use of obscenity in class. "I resent the use of obscenity in class. If adults they need better models."

Many of the complaints brought about by the evaluation are concerned the instructor's ability to convey the material in class and their apparent attitude toward their class.

The teacher doesn't seem to be concerned with students who are failing and dropping his class. Students were doing poorly on class work and he did not cover the trouble spots," said one student.

Another student said, "The teacher of times makes the class feel inferior and continually puts them on the defensive."

Another student commented, "The teacher is a walking textbook. He puts the class to sleep and fails to emphasize what is important out of his mass of notes."

The teacher has a hard time expressing herself. Often times she will spend a whole period on answering questions and ends up leaving the class more confused."

The teacher definitely does not know how to explain the basics of the subject material she explains the material like we are already majors in the subject area."

One other student complained, "because the lectures and labs were poorly organized and badly presented, classmates had to read them should have been necessary, and had to form self-help groups to bring form and coherence in order to organize material for learning and testing."

Pool leak found

by DON McHUGH

Contractors working on the swimming pool in Block M feel that they have finally found the leak that has been draining the pool since its completion.

The leak is located in a pipe below the pool. Workers drained the pool completely after attempts by scuba divers to locate the leak failed. Four core holes have been bored into the bottom of the pool in an effort to make the leaking pipe more accessible.

Another leak was found in the search tank, according to Donald Mince, Director of the Physical Plant. This leak is also being worked on currently.

Another problem with the pool is that rust has developed on the light fixtures in the pool. Mince said that all these changes should be made in time for the second semester, but probably not at the beginning. "We won't be able to fill for sure until Jan. 2," according to Mince.

The racquetball courts in the building are also being prepared for use next semester. Inspectors from Harper found hollow spots in the walls that are being repaired presently.

The glass in the courts is in place currently but is not fully installed as of yet.

There was also a leak found in the wrestling room that has been repaired. An error in the foundation was also found and has been corrected. Minor repairs such as caulking and repointing also have to be done before the building is ready for acceptance by the college.

The dance studio is also being prepared for next semester. Mirrors are being placed in the room, some are already up, and others will be placed in the near future.

Mince was optimistic that the building would be completely ready for acceptance by the college early next semester but he cautioned that construction can occur at any time.

It's down here somewhere. Workers dig four holes into the bottom of the pool in an attempt to find the leak that has been plaguing the pool since its completion. (Photo by Rick Koback)

FERC teacher evaluation: no great achievement

With all the fuss about the recent Harbinger Faculty Evaluation survey being unscientific, nobody has given any negative thought to the new Harper teacher evaluations approved by the Faculty Evaluation Review Committee (FERC).

The FERC evaluation isn't any better than the Harbinger evaluation.

Its biggest drawback is that it is an unscientific selection of Harper students.

Teachers may choose to which class to hand out the evaluation forms. Obviously, many teachers will choose to hand out forms to a good class over a poor class in hopes of a higher rating. Since an instructor's job is to teach not only good students but poor students as well, the poor students have a right to rate their teachers, also. However, this may not be possible because teachers fear that students with lower grades will give them a lower evaluation rating. Thus teachers avoid these students and pass forms out only to good students.

The Harper Faculty Senate President believes that students are incapable of giving an honest evaluation of a teacher and that the evaluation received is based almost entirely on the grade the student receives in class.

It should be made mandatory that every teacher give every one of his classes an evaluation form to fill out so that there is a total student input into the ratings. As it is now, the system is set up to fail. It's validity may soon be questioned and student evaluations may be eliminated from the school entirely.

A system that allows only "satisfactory" and "unsatisfactory" acknowledgements to questions is so vague, even if the evaluation forms were evenly distributed among all Harper students, it wouldn't do much good.

Even at the high school level, evaluations are taken more seriously. Students have more clout. Their evaluations are weighed very heavily.

Aren't college students intelligent and responsible enough to rate their teachers fairly and properly?

The student voice isn't being satisfied with the new evaluations approved by FERC. And the Harbinger doesn't have the power to make every student fill out a Harbinger faculty evaluation form. The only way Harper can make its evaluations more credible is by making them mandatory for every student and improving the quality of the evaluation form itself.

Council imposes several regulations

The American Council of Education intends to stop big government from imposing its regulations on college admission policies, student financial aid and refunding of certain student fees.

Health, Education and Welfare Office of Education (HEW) plans to impose its own rules on the refunding of fees to college drop-outs.

The Committee for Economic Development says that government action has hurt economic growth, boosted inflation, cut worker productivity, and has printed a lengthy study outlining new methods of screening and evaluating such activities as regulation, expenditures, subsidies and loans.

The committee is a private research group against government economic intervention.

Faculty sticks up for Center

Dear Editor:
You have misled and misinterpreted our readers with the recent news story and editorial on the closing of Willow Park Center.

First, and most important, Willow Park Center is not closing, soon or your word. Willow Park will be open for the Spring semester. A schedule has been made and registration is now taking place for day and evening classes in degree credit, continuing education, and adult basic education programs. Your ambiguous wording about the Center's closing has confused students, staff, and faculty.

Second, enrollment at Willow Park Center is not now "declining." At Mid-Term, 1,358 students were enrolled, a 15 per cent increase over Fall, 1978. An actual decline occurred in 1977-78 that now may have been reversed.

Third, you gave the impression that Willow Park was created to handle overflow from an over-crowded main campus, that most students must consequently drive long distances to get to the Center, that few students attend during the day, and that the majority who attend at night are English as a Second Language students. In fact, Willow Park Center was created to be the forerunner for a second campus, not a duplicate of the present campus but a second campus separate in facilities and programs for the 40 per cent of Harper's student body that lives in the eastern part of the college district. Of the students who attend Willow Park, 70 per cent are according to a 1973 poll, from communities near the Center, 40 per cent chose the Center because of its convenient location. Five hundred and thirteen students now attend classes at the Center during the day. Among both day and evening students, only 18 are English as a Second Language students, the majority, 313 and 241 respectively, are Business and Fine Arts students.

Finally, the eventual closing of Willow Park, dictated by short-term economic prudence, may not be the blessing your editorial made it seem. Lessening classroom space in local high schools may save money and discharge the College's community responsibility, but it cannot compensate for the Center's loss. As anyone will attest who has taught or taken courses at both Willow Park and at Harper's high school extensions, Willow Park is superior in atmosphere, facilities, the help the staff provides, and thus, in the quality of the education.

Sincerely,
Jack Daddo,
Communications,
Humanities, and Fine Arts Division

Captain Kirk one facet of Shatner's life

by JOAN PETERSON

Many college students were just children when the original Star Trek series first appeared on television and now the movie Star Trek fans have been waiting for over a decade in finally here, with many of the original cast members from the series in an interview with Star Trek star William Shatner. Captain Kirk now Admiral Kirk, it was learned that the new movie contains many surprises. However he refused to discuss any of the movie's details so as to keep it a mystery. There weren't even any preview showings for critics. And the Shatner labels "good salesmanship." Since 10 years in a lot of time Shatner said he had television reruns of Star Trek to see what he looked like and what he had done.

When Shatner looked back at what he looked like 10 years ago he realized that movie viewers would also look back and compare him with the way he looked in the series. "I guess someone would look back at me and see if I was fat or thin," he said. Shatner said he knew he had to do something about it. He explained that his wife, a former dancer, was suffering from arthritis of the knees as a result of an earlier ski accident. "We read that diet has a lot to do with arthritis," he said. "So we evolved to throwing out sugar, white flour and eventually meat. Three months later her arthritis got better. She threw out her cartilage and started her dancing again."

Shatner then went on to use his dog as an example. "Our dog couldn't get up, her hind legs had collapsed so we look her in the vet." The veterinarian said that the dog was going to die and that they should have her put to sleep. Mr and Mrs. Shatner waited and got a second opinion. The second veterinarian looked at the dog and took X-rays. He told them of a new technique for curing dogs of this affliction by taking them off of meat and kibble.

"The dog was over processed. We put her on a meal that was soy bean based," Shatner said. "After six months the nine-year-old dog was running around like a puppy. Her coat got glossy."

Shatner said that like his dog he had to give up eating a lot of foods he was used to. "What we eat is what we are," he commented, "like to eat good food."

Before changing his eating habits Shatner's average day's menu consisted of Bacon and eggs for breakfast, hamburger and cottage cheese for lunch and steak and vegetables for dinner. This was almost all protein.

Shatner and his entire family started giving more thought to what they ate. "My kids went from getting colds every two weeks to a picture of health," he said. "I and they don't get sick anymore."

Shatner is now the spokesman for the American Health Foundation and is currently involved in starting a new program in the grade schools that will teach proper nutrition and health.

It may be surprising that someone associated with 'out of this world' adventures would be so interested in earthly health habits. But if we're ever going to conquer outer space in the future we've got to start with our own bodies.

REPORTS

Columnist picks hits and flops of '79

Musically, 1979 has been a year of surprises and big disappointments. Albums which have sold well to the public are the result of great ad campaigns, but the quality of the recordings is garbage and the workmanship is terrible. In this column, I would like to point out recordings which have been unnoticed or have not received the attention the record should deserve. And with Christmas closing in with great velocity this may serve as a small, helpful gift guide.

The following are my choices for top 15 lps of 1979, all in alphabetical order.

Cheap Trick LIVE AT BUDAPEST Remember the days of the Beatles? Screaming, frantic music, and lovable lyrics. Cheap Trick are the Beatles of the late '70s. Rock 'n' roll fun.

Elio Costello ARMED FORCES Costello's tongue-in-cheek lyric, with danceable music make his lp playable any time. Song titles like "Accidents Will Happen," "Gone With a Wind," and "The Costello wit and sermons."

Bob Dylan SLOW TRAIN COMING Dylan, recovering from personal problems, writes back at old companions, in complete Americana. Dylan says he has found religion and sings about that fact.

Fleetwood Mac TUSK The recording in Dunes. Computers have now entered the recording industry and their use is limitless. The excellence of the recording only improves the great music abilities of this group.

Joe Jackson LOOK SIMP The hit "Is She Really Got That With Her" is only a small indication of just what the rest of the lp is like. The power pop sound Jackson has a hit. Rosie Lee Jones. The past Jones is noted for her impressions of events surrounding her in the big city. Jones sound a reminiscence of the best rock days.

Kinks LIVE BUDGET The Kinks are covering old bases on this lp. Songs about long gas lines, old crises, bread strikes. Lousy strike problems and more problems, all with a good beat.

Pai Methany AMERICAN GARAGE An impressive array of music done in the new progressive fashion type jazz. Methany's melodies are simply fantastic.

Pai Methany NEW CRATERQUA Rarely does any artist put out two magnificent albums. Pai Methany has done that and is probably the most underrated guitarist of the '70s.

MARATHON ORIGINAL SOUNDTRACK A new and very well done version of Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," performed by the New York Philharmonic conducted by Zubin Mehta.

Graham Parker SQUEEZING OUT SPARKS From beginning to end, non-stop driving electric music. Songs about UFO's, passion, local girls' compliment Parker's voice.

BOY MANIFESTO Forget everything you know about the old Boy, this lp is great. Unbearable melody songs about the emotions.

STRAMP BREAKFAST IN AMERICA Superbump has finally crushed through the commercial barrier. Even though this lp has been such a huge success, the quality and music is superior. Nothing new or too new style changes. Still Superbump is a class act by itself, musicians.

Moods for Moderns

by MIKE SIMKUL

Talking Heads' FEAR OF MICK This lp is not only a rock last week's Harbinger for more details.

Neil Young RUST NEVER SLEEPS Young like storyteller has become precise in word and lyric painting of his scene. His philosophy is quite interesting.

The following five lps are my choices for Honorable Mention, all in alphabetical order. BOB DYLAN THE ALTERNATIVE TO DISCO. The cuts and all times side splitting humorous lyrics make dancing enjoyable.

Cory CANDY O The follow-up attempt is quite good. Many of the songs are done in the same vein as the Cory's debut lp last year.

Chick Corea Gary Burton DALET The easy listening of this lp makes it an all around, anytime record. Burton on vibraphone, and Corea's keyboardmanship are outstanding.

Willie Nelson SINGS KRISTOFFERSON SONGS Willie's sweet melodic voice, accent all the great K songs. Another Willie record which is a great gift idea.

Sex Pistols CARRI ON This lp gives the insight to what actually happened to the Sex Pistols. It is loaded with interviews from radio and TV.

The following five lps are my choices for Honorable Mention, all in alphabetical order. BOONIEVILLE TUNIC FOR THE THROPS Why and at times, humorous lyrics make this lp a lot of fun for the listener.

Cheap Trick DREAM PURGE Cheap Trick has so many songs that the group could release a lp every year until 2000 and still never get rid of them. It material to do so.

Led Zeppelin IN THROUGH THE OUT DOOR With this lp the group demonstrates they may have style in their music which has never been shown to the public before. But, one wonder if this lp could sell without the Led Zeppelin name?

Kenny Rogers GAMBLER This lp is a nice lp for all ages. Rogers voice does not get with age but gets distinguished.

Weather Report I So Weather Report does "Bird Land," plus all the W R favorites. The exceptional quality musicianship is evident throughout the record.

This year's major disappointments are too many to mention. But I would like to attack the year's biggest ad campaign lps.

Bad Company DESOLATION ANGELS This lp is so weak that the producer pulls out all the gimmickery that is available to him. The vocals are terrible, guitar leads are always hit, it seems no one in the group knows just what the group's direction is.

Eagles THE LONG RUN There is just one question about this lp (could take someone for this we waited two years?) The only song worth anything at all is Walsh's, "In The Eye"; and this is available on the Warriors' soundtrack. The Eagles attempted change did not work, they should stay with the sound that made them famous.

Steve Martin COMEDY IS NOT PRETTY Steve is in trouble. His new lp is not selling. This lp is not at all funny, and the material is weak. The interior asks himself, "Didn't he do that on the last lp?"

And, lastly, I would like to add the Paul McCartney lp, BACK TO THE EGGS, Kansas MUNCHIE, Ted Nugent's STATE OF SHOCK, Queen LIVE, Chicago 13, Robin Williams, REALITY WHAT A CONCEPT.

The lp's will be more new, more serious music. To look at the future look at the past. Start your 1980 lists now!!!

Charts shows location change probable

"Once finished with school and parents, will my location change - out of state or country - due to job, marriage, or other?" Will I find success in a photography career?

Your Sun sign being Sagittarius, placed in the fourth house, is a sure indication of having to travel great distances and being able to feel at home wherever you may find yourself. It also represents a need to be free and independent from your home situation, though, I hope you never consider yourself "trapped" with your parents.

A location change is probable for the next few years. It may very likely be a distant move, though I doubt it will be a final one. You are wondering about the cause of your move? Well, it'll be you, regardless of your involvements with other people or external situations. As independent individual such as yourself always has the free will to accept or deny life's choices as they arise. Indirectly, you are always in control!

You will probably find yourself growing more and more restless with where you are as times goes on. My suggestion for you is to try to travel. If you can't travel through leisure activities and vacations, I recommend finding a job that motivates you so you can relocate and explore the world.

The Moon in Gemini, elevated in the tenth house of goals, reveals your strongest talent as the power of communication and persuasion. This can be beneficial in areas such as public relations, advertising, marketing, law, writing, media, and in all dealings with people. The dual sign of Gemini up there is indicative of several careers throughout your lifetime.

Astro Awareness by JILL REALEY

(Other factors in your chart indicate a very professional, conservative, serious, cautious attitude towards self-expression and social involvements, as well as symbolizing a great deal of ambition and strength inducing inner tensions. Did you ever consider a career involving foreign relations, international law, mass media communications, teaching, or being an interpreter?) Your chart does lead me to believe that you could have powerful influence over the masses, especially among the people here in the United States. There are very favorable contacts between the U.S. chart and yours, and I feel you could be an extremely effective contributor to our nation.

Photography, as well as any other creative media, could be successful for you. There are indications in your chart of artistic as well as the technical abilities necessary for this field, but they are not as strongly emphasized as the other factors that I have already mentioned. If you do pursue photography as a career, make sure you find a situation that allows you to get directly involved with people, and gives you the freedom to travel about.

Dealing with the public, dispersing information, travel, communication, and being in a position of prominence, would bring you the most gratification and satisfaction in your life.

Choosing the kind of path to follow might be very difficult for you. I sense, that contrary to the social you, there's another part of you that wants to remain very vague about and discreet in most of your involvements with others, and in general with life. You've got a lot of possibilities, and whatever you're choosing is, Good Luck!

Anyone wishing astrological interpretations please submit specific questions and required birth data to the Harbinger office located in a 367, Look there for further details.

Women's basketball improves

by JOE KUSEK

There's one lean on Harper's campus that sports a winning record but no one has the faintest idea who they are. Well, to inform everyone and make them more knowledgeable on the Harp's sports scene, it is the one and only women's basketball team. The team was its first two games and have vastly improved from the past season. "We're definitely better than last year. We've got more height, a few more in numbers and the new facility has really helped," said coach Tom Teacher, who in his second year of leading the women. Last season the Hawks had to scramble for open spots and if they were lucky they could practice three times a week. Coming back for the Hawks in last year's leading scorer, Val Weidner, who has now found home at the Harvard spot. Weidner has been hampered by a bad ankle and played the last game with a broken nose, suffered on the Hawk's opener. "She's amazing. She still keeps going. She attacked the play against Kinsauker," said Teacher. "She really wants to play but only feels it that she may be a little overly aggressive, she picks up a lot of reaching fouls that those are some mistakes I hope the others play with the same competitiveness. In their last game Harper started Kinsauker 09:25. The Hawk's were paced by Lee Ann Howe, who poured in 29 points to lead all scorers. Also hitting double figures was Weidner with 16 and guard Kathy Pfander who pumped in 14 as they outscored the lady Kozzars 40:4 in the first half. Pfander, according to Teacher has really helped the team. "Val Weidner" and Kathy Pfander are two tough players, they put up very well," said Teacher. Other starters besides Weidner Pfander and Howe are Karen (McMasa a transfer from West Virginia and Mary McFarlane another transfer from last year's squad. Coming off the bench to make big contributions should be Liv Vester and Mary Ann Larson and Kathy Holmes. "We have good depth on the bench. We've improved an awful lot. We won't have the problems we had last year," said Teacher. "This is the best team we've had and should be good but I don't know how much the other teams in conference have improved. Thornton will be tough ranked No. 9 in the nation last season. Juliet, Illinois Valley, Rock Valley are all good. The Hawks find out if they are for real when they take the court against Rock Valley, Wednesday at home, 8:00, 8:30 & 9:00 p.m. in a still 'N8' test. They then travel to Marquette Valley the next night play at 5 p.m. in a last minute addition the women will play at the Zigzag Tournament Friday and Saturday. Friday they will play Illinois Nazareth. See, come back Saturday morning to have a rematch with Zigzag. Then in the afternoon take on Wheaton College.

Women's gymnastic vaults into action

by JOE KUSEK

Women's gymnastics after a year's absence vaults into action Thursday Dec. 13 in a dual meet in Wheaton College at 6:00 p.m. The team last year had to disband due to lack of numbers and lack of a place in practice on a regular basis.

Now the team has the proper and the facilities with the completion of bldg M and everything is starting out on a positive note for the season. "I'm enthusiastic going into the season," said coach Bruce Weidner. "I'm excited about using their practice time very well and working really hard on their routines."

Coming back to the team in 1979, Polvere who was victimized by the team's folding last year Polvere is an all-arounder, with her strength being the uneven parallel bars and vaulting. "Each as an individual has really improved on much over the last 14 weeks. She is really motivated to do well this year. She works hard all the time in practice and in the gym. The others on the team that could make the Hawk contenders for the 'N8' title and hopefully get to the national air freshman Kathy Hake will around uneven bars and vaulting, will help when she becomes freshman. Mary Beth Black, who Mr. Zellner says is an excellent gymnast. His black is very strong in the floor exercises and beam. Cindy Curtis another freshman will be competing in floor exercises and beam. Sandra Shuman noble in the compulsory floor exercises and beam. Sandy Gagliardi has been hampered by a sprained ankle but should be strong on the bars, and sophomore Ann Bieringer, will help when she becomes

Basketball romps past Thornton 97-60

by JOE KUSEK

Harper basketball coach Roger Beckhold's team has been looking for his team to put together a full 40 minutes of basketball in the past the Hawks were plagued by inconsistency they could play the best teams even up but then come back and fall apart against cellar dwellers.

Well, his team played a complete game, just ask Thornton College. The Hawks put together hot shooting and a tight man-to-man defense to read the Bulldogs 97-60 last Thursday night on Harper's home floor. "This is the first time we've put a whole game together. This was our best game so far," said Beckhold. After the Hawks topped their record in 20 in 'N8' conference play and 45 overall. "Everything fell into place. The difference was that we were able to control the game and that enabled us to generate our fast break."

The Hawks jumped to a 10-12 lead with minutes remaining in the first half on the hot hand of Bob Doney. Doney poured in 12 of his game high 18 points, hitting shots from both sides of the baseline, missing only two. The Hawks took a 31-20 halftime lead, having three players in double figures in the first half. Besides Doney, Chris Plunk and Tim Lopez had ten points apiece going into the intermission. With Harper making the game a joke, Beckhold was allowed to rest freely and the subs kept pouring in. In a surprise show of offensive power the Hawks hit an average of 40 per cent of their first half shots, rare shooting for college ball. Harper didn't get complacent in the second half, hanging to 50 per cent for the final 20 minutes of the game.

to make it a laugher. "In the past we've usually being going into halftime. I was worried they might get complacent the second half," said assistant coach Joe Kozel, who said he had nothing to worry about when the Hawks secured the first six points after coming back into the floor. "The big thing for us was that no sub would like a sub."

When the romp was over,

Harper had five players hitting double-digits. Doney led with 18. Plunk finished the night with 16. Craig Rawlins picked up 15 on rebound baskets. Lopez ended with 14 and Dave Strawn came off the bench to pump in 13 for the winners. The Hawks travel to Washburn Thursday night at 7:30 p.m., with their next time battle vs. McHenry, Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

Wrestlers beat Wright

by KIP VANDERHAGEN

Dan Weber and I felt what he commented on the Harper wrestling team 50-0 win over Wright College of Chicago. "Personally, I think that this win has more than it can help us. After all Wright has never been known to have a powerhouse when it comes to wrestling. The last thing we need now is a big lead going into the challenge meet next week. It's going to be hard enough without us being cocky."

Whether they are cocky or not the Hawks still deserve a little credit for last week's romp over Wright. Mike Levy started the meet off on a sour note for the Hawks when he dropped a major decision to his Wright opponent, but Jay Evans soon made everyone forget about the opening match when he pinned his competitor in the second period.

Next, Howard Leggett and Paul Galskowski made their appearance to receive forfeits. Then it was Dan Weber to show his Wright opponent that he was made of 100 lb. power five minutes to get started but then he turned on the power and pinned his antagonist with 15 seconds to go in the bout. Mike Walsten was next to show Harper's dominance over Wright with a 7-2 win.

Bob Van Boven bared his opponent with a third place pin before Van Boven pinned his adversary after he built up a 23-2 score. Jeff Rickard threw every move in the book against his rival and still could not gain his opponent. Rickard had to settle for a 2-3 with head coach Bob Mural had an exciting match. His opponent wasn't accustomed to Mural's aggressive style of wrestling so he threw a perfectly placed right hook to Mural's forehead. Mural retaliated by pinning him within the next half minute to set him straight. Next the grapplers pitted themselves against the forfeit riddled line-up of Truman College. Once again Mike Levy started the match off for the Hawks, but with different results than his previous match. This time, Levy pinned his man in the second period.

Howard Leggett and Paul Galskowski followed Levy's example and pinned their respective opponents. Jeff Rickard was next on the mat to turn a Truman wrestler down in defeat. Harper won the one-sided meet by a 3-0 margin. The squad of grapplers will travel to Rock Valley to compete in the Rock Valley Open wrestling tournament.

Harper lacks good study atmosphere

Where is the best place for students to study at Harper? Chairs in the halls; no it's too noisy. Tables in the cafeteria; no there's too much music. Study cubicles in the library; no it's too quiet.

Harper is lacking a semi quiet mellow, comfortable place to study and meet fellow students.

A practical solution to this problem is to set a student study area or student union on the second floor of Bldg. A and the present lounge area. This area doesn't have to be used for public speakers or lectures anymore because of the new Bldgs. I, J and M. These new bldgs. provide a bigger and better place in which to hold these events so that the Bldg. A lounge may be put to better student use.

Student moral and student relationships would improve with the introduction of a new study area. Crazy couches could be sat upon to study. A television could be placed in one corner for students to watch in between studying. The fire place could even be lit up in the winter to provide some immediate warmth and enlighten student study habits.

If students had a better atmosphere to study, maybe they would get better grades. And maybe if there was a better place to "hang out", Harper wouldn't seem like such a cold and lonely place for many students.

Student plugs solar energy

Dear Editor,

If the energy shortage is as serious as some people seem to think, we should decide now to switch to solar energy. Solar energy is the most efficient source of energy available to man. The environmental and economic advantages will be enormous.

One advantage of solar power would be the lack of pollution. The strip mining procedure used for coal gives us an extremely poor imitation of nature's beautiful canyons. These man-made holes-in-the-ground can and have become ugly scars that mar the surface of the earth. Once we have the coal we fare no better, enormous black smoke that pours out of factories and power plants affects every phase of the ecological chain. On a seemingly clear day, take a look at the horizon, it's not pure blue anymore, the eyes are not deceiving us, that is a tinge of brown facing the sky. Heaven help us — or solar power.

Nuclear energy brings to the constant fear of radiation leaks and meltdowns, a needless danger in today's society. At the present rate of all of these small leaks released into the atmosphere could turn the human race into a bunch of G-man mutants, if we survive at all. The nuclear waste problem cannot be solved, what can be done with something which lasts at least five hundred billion years, if we survive at all, there lies no hope, smoke, smoke, smoke.

Along with this horrible pollution there is another fact to consider, availability. Our oil supply will last, at the most, seventy-five years, nuclear fuel will disappear in twenty, and our coal supply is perhaps five hundred, where as energy from the sun is virtually limitless.

Granted, the beginning stages of this switch-over will be expensive and will require some self-sacrifice. The government could do more now by taking the bulk of the financial responsibility. For example, computers in the early six were some sort of dream to have in one's home, but by the middle of the '70s, it is relatively inexpensive to purchase one at the local Radio Shack. This change in price and availability was due to NASA and the Project Apollo Space Program. The government spent billions for computers, transportation, and the accompanying technology in a roundabout way it was subsidizing the industry. Today, if all new local, state and federal projects were required to include solar power, the increased production would mean the private citizen would be able to afford this within years. Harper College's roots seem ideally suited for the installation of solar power. If a joint student faculty movement is started and the administration doesn't drag its feet, Harper could rely on the sun for part of its energy needs.

My opinion is that the American public is fed up with oil shortages, meltdowns, demonstrations and other energy related incidences. Small oil rich countries de-

Old - time colleges flourish

Students who score high on standardized tests - even those who live in the western United States - are once again choosing to attend the old-time prestigious colleges in the northeastern U.S. instead of colleges closer to home.

Lewis Solomon, who co-authored the study which discovered the trend for the Los Angeles - based Higher Education Research Institute, boiled it down to: "What we are seeking is more people in the West looking east, and fewer people in the East looking West."

Solomon isn't sure why high-scoring western students have been migrating to eastern colleges like Bryn Mawr, Yale, Dartmouth, Columbia, and Princeton in greater numbers. His study, which he co-authored with Alexander W. Astin, does conclusively show that some of the West's more prestigious schools - Stanford, Reed, and Pomona - are no longer mentioned among the top ten choices of those who score highest on standardized tests. When raw numbers of high-scoring students are compared, Solomon says "larger institutions such as Stanford and Duke rank much higher."

As expected, the Solomon-Astin study has excited a lot of controversy, especially amid western and midwestern administrators. They point out that test scores are not the only criteria weighed in a college's decision to admit or reject an applicant.

tating to us on how our economy should be run.) Since large corporations have not found a way to meter the sun, the burden falls on us to fill the government what we want done with our tax dollars. The sooner that solar energy is introduced the sooner we, as well as the rest of the world, can reap the benefits of solar power. Solar energy isn't something to ponder, it's here and we should do it now! Philip J. Kurr

Cost of dating rises

CPS Twenty-five years ago you could take a date to a movie, an inexpensive dinner, and then out for a drink or two and a little dancing for about $9.50. But Ray Devo, a New York investment strategist warns that the same date could cost as much as $41.

According to Zodiak News Service, Devo has examined the skyrocketing price of doing out, movie theater tickets, miniature lunches at Italian restaurants, and cocktails in fancy restaurants, and compared his findings with the cost of the same activities 25 years ago.

Devo discovered that while the cost of living has gone up 172 percent since 1954, "the cost of loving" - his term for the cost of courting or dating - has risen at twice that rate, or 346 percent

Student poll shows Carter handling crisis well

By DON MURPHY

In a recent poll taken on campus by the Harbinger, Harper students showed an overwhelming support for President Carter's actions concerning the crisis in Iran. Eighty-five percent of the students polled felt that Carter was handling the situation as well as could be expected, while only 14 per cent felt that Carter was doing a poor job. Five per cent of the students polled were undecided.

This correlates with the recent Gallup poll taken which showed that 75 per cent of the general public was satisfied with Carter's actions while 14 per cent felt he was not doing a good job. Nine per cent of those polled in the Gallup Poll were undecided.

Of those polled in the Harbinger poll, 87 per cent were optimistic that the hostages returned unharmed. Forty-three per cent of those polled felt that the hostages would not be returned alive. Since the poll was taken last week before the Ayatollah made his announcement that if the hostages were overruled, they would not be sentenced to death. This leaves open the possibility that the hostages could remain in Iran for an indefinite period of time.

Students were also asked if they thought military force would be used ultimately in an attempt to get the hostages back.

Sixty-one per cent of those asked responded that they thought military force would be used ultimately, while only 24 per cent felt that the hostages could be returned under a peaceful agreement.

This differs significantly from those who felt that military force should be used in Iran.

Only thirty-six per cent of those polled felt that military action should be used, while 64 per cent did not see military force as being necessary.

Students were then asked how they would react if an all out war against Iran and its surrounding countries were to develop. The question posed was whether or not they would appear at the draft board. Reinstated. Thirty-one per cent of the students polled said they would be in favor of the draft under those circumstances, but fifty-three per cent said they would still be opposed in the draft. Eight per cent who are undecided.

Thirty per cent of those asked responded that they felt the draft should be returned to Iran. Twenty-eight per cent responded that the draft should be sent somewhere outside the U.S. Nineteen per cent felt that the draft should be kept here in the U.S. while twenty-two per cent felt that the draft should be left to the shah.

Ninety-two per cent of students polled felt that the U.S. would lose world respect if they were to return the shah to Iran while 8 per cent felt that the U.S. would have nothing to lose by returning the shah.

Twenty-seven per cent of the students said they had developed a better opinion of Carter because of the crisis while most per cent felt their opinion of Carter had dropped.

Ninety-four per cent of those responding said that their opinion of Carter had not changed.

Finally when asked who would win out in the end, the crisis, 36 per cent felt that the U.S. would win out in the end, while only one per cent felt that the shah would win out. Forty-three per cent felt that there would be no winner in the end.

Arizona moves to ban Iranians

CPS "The bill in the way of voting our feelings about the way they're treating our people over there."

The bill, introduced in the Arizona State House of Representatives, would do nothing less than raise tuition for Iranian students at state schools to about $10,000 per semester. Bill sponsor Jim Cooper declared, "We're just letting people know."

Rep. Cooper, who chairs the House Education Committee, doesn't expect the full legislature to approve the tougher tuition bill, though he claims the sentiment behind the bill has a lot of support. "We had a lot of good comments. It's all because of the frustration people feel right now."

The bill would charge Iranians in Arizona state schools $1,000 per credit hour per semester. Those Iranians carrying the standard load of 12 credits could face tuition charges of more than $12,000 per year.

"I think the student body is close to 100 percent against the Iranians being here," Ralph Savage, president of Chatsahoochee Valley Community College in Phenix City, Alabama, told College Press Service.

Savage had moved to ban all Iranian students from enrolling for winter quarter at the 2,300-student campus. There were 12 Iranians enrolled for fall quarter.

Savage rescinded his order after talks with U.S. State Department officials. Similarly, the board of Greenville Technical College in Greenville, S.C., passed and then rescinded an order banning Iranians from winter registration.

Violating the ban on Iranians hasn't softened Chatsahoochee's resolve to avoid trouble, either here or at a demonstration here," he asserts, "and I'll kick them off campus. That goes for Americans or Iranians."

Savage says the only reason he rescinded the ban was because the State Dept. warned him it could be "an impediment to other colleges in the United States to follow suit, and thereby affect more than 50,000 Iranian students." If that happened, negotiations with Iran could be inhibited.

Colleges getting more aid from big business

CPS - Colleges and university took in a record $1.05 billion in private contributions in 1979, according to the Council for Financial Aid to Education (CFAE). Some five million of the total came from corporate contributors.

The increases in both categories were in line with colleges' intensified fund-raising among private sources and with hardening business attitudes about supporting college programs. Many colleges have come to depend more on business funding sources that are not, according to theory, subject to the tax-cutting whims of state legislators and the federal government.

But the amount of corporate investment in academia is also dependent on public events. The CFAE notes in its report that "the history of growth of voluntary support is less dependent on developments in higher education itself than it is on the economic health of the nation at large."

Boston's Committee for Corporate Support is Private Universities released a study in June showing that a majority of business executives favor increasing the amounts of money corporations give higher education, while decreasing the percentage of funds provided by the federal government.

One reason for the corporate willingness to contribute may be that 75 percent of the executives interviewed expressed the "liberal bias" of most college programs, and said academics were too critical of business.

James Mooney, editor of Foundation News, here, attributes the corporate generosity to awareness of the rising costs of college. The higher education price index rose 10 percent last year, and Mooney points out that many executives have children in college who must pay for it. Nevertheless, Mooney cautions, "we're treating the symptoms, not the disease."

The level of private funding, according to CFAE, has now reached the point at which each college student in 1979 was subsidized by about $270 in outside support.

Harper graduate writes touring children's play

by MORI NORTON

This year's theater production for children, "The Amazing Garden of Fandie Ross" is an original play by LARRY NEPODIALI, a Harper graduate. "I enjoy doing plays for the children's theater," he said "because you can just move of your imagination."

Children have a short attention span and need action and involvement "or else they will be bored," he said. In this play there are several times when the children in the audience are asked to participate.

The story revolves around a boy named Handle whose parents want him to grow up and accept responsibility.

Handle meets a farmer friend named Fandie Frank who suggests caring for a garden would be just the thing, and gives Handle some "special seeds" which become walking, talking vegetables.

Two nosy neighbors see the vegetables and look for someone who will be a witness to verify what they saw.

A witness named Al the Agent is found, actually Fandie Frank in disguise, who sews the vegetables walking and talking and tricks Handle into signing a contract giving up his rights to the vegetable.

Al wants to take the vegetables away, but Handle grabs them and in a tug of war, the vegetables roots are pulled off making them lifeless.

As a result all fears up the contrast, and leaves, advising Handle that he should be careful about what he signs in the future.

Handle admits his mistake and accepts the responsibility for what happened with the vegetables.

"The moral of the story is 'be careful what you sign,'" said Nepodiali.

"I don't have bad guys or villains in my stories," he said "I prefer having some moral printed out."

Before the play goes on tour in local elementary schools, there will be two showings at Harper, Wednesday at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.

Although playwrighting is his major interest, Nepodiali also involved in acting and directing.

He recently finished directing the drama "Play It Again Sam" by Woody Allen with the Two-Tangle Theatre Group and before that he played the part of fifty children in "The Flea Over the Cuckoo's Nest."

Nepodiali plans to attend Columbia College in Chicago in February to do film study work.

Campus energy costs on steady upswing

CTIS "This isn't the best of times for physical plant managers."

Those managers are led by one Paul Knapp, who heads the slightly named Association of Physical Plant Managers of Universities and Colleges, and who is, fittingly enough, both optimistic.

"There is a tremendous burden on educational facilities right now," he indicates. Knapp methodically ticks off the reasons why "with declining enrollment, declining standards, handicapped standards, and maintenance, the institutions are being upped a large amount."

Worse yet, Knapp was responding to a question about energy, which is the managers' most troublesome problem of the moment. Managers were already groaning under unanticipated energy cost increases even before the Iranian oil cutoff threatened to drive energy prices even higher.

Yale administrators, for example, watched campus energy costs hit $11 million in 1978-79, a 100 percent increase over 1978. Through they responsibly hedged another increase this year and patriotically appropriated $2.4 million to make campus buildings more energy efficient, they had to begin Thanksgiving break with an announcement that university energy costs for 1979-80 were running a full $4 million over budget anyway.

Yale's problems aren't unique. The University of Connecticut's energy costs have increased by $3.3 million per year, despite conservation measures that have saved it an estimated $4.3 million. The University of California Berkeley is trying to cope with an estimated 10 percent increase in energy costs. The University of Florida planned for a 30 percent increase, but has gotten an increase closer to 40 percent. As of mid-November, it was close to $500,000 over its energy budget.

"If we don't get special appropriations or convert unneeded faculty salaries," Florida Executive Vice President John Nattress warned the Florida Alligator, "then we may have to close down the university."

Nattress quickly qualifies the remark, saying it was "an off-the-top-of-the-head threat," but it is typical of the kind of frustration college energy managers are feeling these days.

Federal efforts to force them into conservation programs have brought only mixed results. On July 18, President Carter ordered that thermostats in all public buildings be kept at 78 degrees in the summer, and 65 degrees after Oct. 1. If everyone complied, he said, the U.S. would cut its oil consumption by 250,000 barrels per day.

We have had very few people who are unable to comply with the standards," Knapp repeats in the other hand, "it is doubtful that [turning down thermostats] will save energy."

There's no doubt the thermostat program has awakened some resentment among administrators over yet another area of governmental "interference" in university affairs.

"I tell you, we're not in strict compliance," says University of Alabama Physical Plant Manager Chris Mason. Mason said the University has "a real good" conservation program, but that it isn't like Washington's. The reason is that the university uses natural gas, not oil. "We could shut the university down and not save a drop of oil," he explains. He expects "federal regulators will be on my back anyway."

Complying with the regulation, moreover, could hurt schools a lot of money. University of Georgia Plant Director Ken Jordan told the Red & Black student paper that because campus buildings are varying ages and have overabundance of varying applicability, he had some oil kept. The campus is an average 78 during the summer. "There may not be a building that has an absolute setting at 78," he said.

The university bought a small computer system to help regulate temperatures "on an experimental basis" but failed a complete campus-wide system would cost "a couple of million dollars."

To purchase its centralized, computer controlled temperature system, the University of Houston spent $1.5 million. But, perhaps typically, in university energy matters, bugs in the system have kept it from being operational. Regulating thermostats by hand, however, can be very hard on big campuses. Joy Sporal of the University of Colorado complains, "There are so many buildings and so few people that just as soon as we finish setting the thermostats for a particular season, it's time to change them again." He says there are "literally thousands" of thermostats on his campus.

He estimates that a centralized control system could average $100,000 per building.

Yet physical plant managers have few ways of estimating how much either federally or campus-initiated conservation programs will have them. Though Knapp promises central control systems can pay for themselves in "two to three years."

Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville, for one, experienced with energy conservation in August when it shortened summer or recess weeks from five to four days. Note the university is considered from it again later in the school year. Assistant Provost Dr. Ed Beard, however, notes "There really is no precise way to prove savings."

Administrators readily offer estimates of energy savings, nevertheless. The University of New Mexico claims its conservation program is saving $200,000 a year. Treason State says it saved $200,000 in 1978-79. The University of Alabama said its summer, 1979 energy bill was $130,000 below the summer, 1978 bill.

Asked how the savings were made, Alabama Inance Vice President Robert Wright offered a handsy explanation. "They're turning out lights, cutting down on the use of air conditioners, and mostly doing what they can do themselves."

Despite the hand-wringing and financial risks, such informal measures seem more typical of university energy programs than formal campus-wide control efforts.

Northeast Missouri State University, for example, put all its security personnel in Cashman scooters, while Iowa State sold the physical plant department's trucks in favor of six rucksacks Iowa State and Iowa, moreover, are encouraging their departments to use pinball, potentially a major industry in that farm state, instead of gas in all school vehicles.

At the University of Arizona, an administration computer was programmed to help match students with carpools, but the program has been disappointing. Lake Erie College and Fairfield Senior College in Painesville, Ohio have been more successful with a program that gives an $18 tuition discount on three credit courses to students who carpool to and from classes.

Such measures, however, haven't discouraged administrators from seeking longer range solutions. The University of Illinois, which expects to spend $1 million more on energy in 1980 than in 1979, has already allocated for converting a university power plant from oil to natural gas.

The government, which is trying to encourage plants to convert from oil to coal, has started a "high sulphur coal demonstration" plant at Georgetown University. The pollution from the plant, according to Richard Stephens of the Department of Energy, will be under Washington, D.C. effluence standards.

The University of Kansas also considered building a new power plant, one that would burn waste and wood. Plans were tabled when Kansas discovered the plant would cost $1820 million to build. Less ambitiously, Harvard spent $700,000 in August to purchase a Gulf Oil gas station near campus.

Selling papers big business for some

CPS Like many students, Rainy Mendoza had honorable intentions. She'd worked long and hard for her doctorate, and labored nearly months to develop statistics for her dissertation with a reluctant Bureau of Indian Affairs. Once all that was done, she got cold feet.

"Although I had X amount of English training in college," Mendoza, now a guidance counselor in Tulsa, Oklahoma, recalls, "I felt that I was not adept enough with the language to accurately write the dissertation herself."

When she asked her advisor about commissioning someone else to do the writing, she says her advisor didn't forbid her. So on April 17, 1978, she sent a $400 check and a letter to Pacific Research of Seattle, a firm which sells "research" papers to anyone with the requisite cash. True to its word, Pacific Research soon delivered a dissertation with the imprecise title of "The Newborn Intelligence Scales for Children and the Wide Range Achievement Test: Their Use on Native American Indian Children."

Does she have any post-graduate ethical doubts about her purchased dissertation? Not really. She says her purchase, which one Pacific Research insider estimated probably cut time to complete, "goes on everywhere."

She's right. Though there are no available sales estimates in this closed-mouth industry, term paper selling is enjoying a boom, if Pacific Research accurately reflects what is going on.

Gil Shere and Michael Gross, two University of Washington grads, parlayed a clogging business in Seattle's University District into a mail-order catalogue full of term papers for sale in 1977. Now, they say the business has spilled over from one to four converted basements full of three dozen employees on Queen Anne Hill and includes a graphics arts department, four divisions, and even computer time bought from a local bank. The number of computer terminals in the office, according to a Pacific Research employee, has doubled in just the last year.

In the process, Shere and Gross, who refused to comment, have cranked up an impressive sales machine that includes widespread advertising in college news and magazines, bulletin board coupons, and, of course, the catalogue, with some 200 pre-written papers on subjects ranging from "America: Contemporary Social Life to Zoology."

The firm, like other research services, also offers "custom research," which carries charges for $20 per page of undergraduate work, and $0 per page for graduate scientific, or technical work.

The rates are competitive with the other major research companies. The most Los Angeles Research Assistance will charge you for one of the 10,000 titles it claims to have on file at 50¢ to 25 cents less than Pacific's maximum. Some of the other major and minor research firms around are Collegiate Research, International Termpapers, and such colorfully named groups as Planned Paperhood, Quality Bulkish, and Write-In, Inc.

The quality of their work inevitably varies. Mendoza found her dissertation was "inclusive." A slight regretter at Washington State University bought a paper last year from Research Assistance as part of a shen on buying papers, and found that the research she thought was truly plagiarized from a 1964 Saturday Review article.

Frank Johnson of Research Assistance told College Press Service that such plagiarism cases "have never happened," and that while the firm had no editorial review board or fact-checking, it had a "very reliable staff."

Yet the work is good enough often enough to bring some students passing grades, and others, like Mendoza, full graduate degrees. College Press Service, for example, has found that the University of Nebraska successfully granted a masters in education this summer to a high school principal who had submitted a thesis on which Pacific Research did at least some of the work.

And it happens often enough to generate a lot of concern among educators. Plagiarized papers represent nothing less than "a breakdown of trust in the academic community," according to Layton Olson of the National Student Educational Fund. Olson, a student who is studying fees that other students may be having a grade. "Class wrote in April, there is a breakdown in the rules of the game for whom the contract is," Olson states. "California, New York, North Carolina, Illinois, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Washington, and New Jersey have tried to legislate against companies selling term papers. Yet they are tough laws to enforce."

For one thing, there are legitimate research sources, and the line between protecting legitimate research sources and controlling retail plagiarism is a fine one. "I write not carefree," notes Washington legislator Don Chisely, "we could put the Encyclopedia Britannica out of business."

Other kinds of problems in legally stopping the research firms became evident when the Illinois attorney general's office investigated Pacific Research for four months in 1978. Selling term papers in Illinois is illegal, as the attorney general's office, according to staffer Mary McCallagh, bought and received two papers from the firm in order to prove the firm was breaking the law.

Once the papers arrived, it became a mail fraud case. Yet there was enough of a question about Pacific Research's actions that the attorney general's office simply dropped the investigation. According to 1972 Appeals Court decision in U.S. v. International Term Papers, the firm doesn't defend accusations if it reconstitutes a scheme which involves misrepresentation based on the materials the firm sends.

That's why the firm insists on publicly calling their wares "research," rather than term papers. By doing so, they evade responsibility for how the material is ultimately used by buyers of Pacific Research materials, for me, get a contract which swears the buyer is getting data "intended to be used solely for research and reference purposes."

It is apparently a little harder to maintain the distinction within the organization, though. According to a Pacific Research staffer, fewer than a fifth of the contracts are ever signed by the buyers. Two of the firm letters sent over the signature of Shirley Jay, director of custom research for the company, refer to delivering a "paper," not research.

Nevertheless, prosecutors still haven't found a way to halt the firm. The demand for the firm's services, meanwhile, seems to be strong, and the entrepreneurs maintain the demand sanctions their continued operations.

Students are entitled to buy research, says John Hopkins of Collegiate Research Systems, because colleges themselves are hypocritical. "The educational system has their own problems," he told a Detroit newspaper. "The presidents of some colleges in New York have advised the educational funds to finance their own private trips to Europe and elsewhere."

It is doubtful, however, that many term paper customers view their purchases as righteous blows against hypocrisy. In its catalogue, Pacific Research probably more accurately sees its function as "making college life easier."

A jerk: From Harper to Hollywood

by JOAN PETERSON

When comedian Steve Martin appeared at Harper with "Tend the Mine" almost three years ago few students imagined they'd soon be seeing him on television and at the movies. And now the comedians they paid $3 dollars to see at their own school can be seen in his new movie "The Jerk" for $4. In a recent interview with movie's director Carl Reiner and Martin many of Martin's past acting experiences were related: Saturday Night Live, and the Johnny Carson show. However Harper College was not among his list of most memorable appearances. Martin and Reiner did have a lot to say about "The Jerk" which opened last weekend at area theaters.

"The movie has an R rating," Reiner said. "It has a couple of words children shouldn't know. What's happening in the world is it kids want to get in to an R rated movie they will."

Martin said he wasn't that upset by the rating. "It's not really as R picture," he claimed. "Besides the foul language in the movie there's a nude scene with Martin and two puppets. Two consenting adult dogs," Reiner corrected. However, it was later learned that the dogs had a purely functional part in the movie that contained no sexual overtones.

Reiner did admit that some of the movie's scenes were created for shock value. "Sex and going to the bathroom are a very integral part of every one's life," he said. "We do all of those things and we can't demand them."

"The Jerk" is a story about a man named Navin, the adopted son of a family of black sharecroppers. He sets out to make his way in the world by working at a gas station and making it 8 in an hour. He then gets a job as a weight gasser in a carnival and gets involved with a woman motorcycle. He then goes on to become a millionaire and finds his true love, a cosmetologist, played by Bernadette Peters.

A typical rags to riches story? Not really. Martin has the particular talent of acting like an even bigger jerk than the former king of 1960s, Jerry Lewis.

When asked if he acted like a nut all the time Martin said, "I'm funny with some people and straight with others. If I was funny all the time I wouldn't have any friends."

I was a class clown all through high school," he continued. "But in college I got serious and studied." When Martin appeared at Harper, he played second fiddle to a mime act. A past Harbinger issue reported, "Antoninette Atefi, alias Tood the Mime, will open the show. Tood will be a perfect complement to Steve Martin. Martin is actually a serious person. His act includes making balloon animals and wearing them on his head, or wearing rabbit ears at the same time, or adding fake eyeglasses and a giant Jimmy Durante nose."

"Sound like a fool? Well Martin really has a lot going for him. He went from wearing balloons on his head in front of college students to acting like a jerk in front of millions in movie goers.

Crusade report

The 1979 Crusade of Mercy Campaign yielded $3,351.08. These contributions from 193 members of the Harper staff, as well as "change for the crusade" represented a 91 percent increase over the 1978 campaign. Karen Morgan and Kathy Solomon, members of the classified staff, were fair share contributors who gave one day's pay to the Crusade of Mercy.

Piggy fans unite; form fan club

13% of the government's effort to chase down students who default on financial aid loans have reached a new stage of success. The U.S. Office of Education reports that $42 million in 218,000 bad Guaranteed Student Loans (GSLs) were collected in fiscal 1979 compared to about $10 million in 1977.

Leo Pankiewicz, who helps administer GSLs for the Office of Education, asks the government's two-month-old crackdown on National Direct Student Loans (NDSLs) is also starting to show results though it is too soon to accurately evaluate the collection program.

There are currently about 240,000 "bad" NDSLs representing about $170 million still to be collected. The new crackdown has closed the books on around 1800 NDSLs worth $22.00.

When the Office of Education launched its program to collect defaulted GSLs in 1977, there were 200,000 bad debts worth $80 million.

Pankiewicz notes that there are still 600,000 loans under various kinds of financial aid programs that the government still can't do anything about because colleges haven't given them to Washington for collection yet.

Government chases down defaulters

CPS. What started as just a bunch of folks gathered each week to watch The Muppet Show has grown into a full-blown fan club for one of the show's more corpulent members, the lovely Miss Piggy. "We all just love Miss Piggy," confessed Sue Kensler, founder of the University of Kansas Miss Piggy Fan Club. Kensler told the Daily Kansan the 15-member group started with little pink pig ears attached to headbands, which they wore once or twice a month to dinner. But their devotion soon outgrew the restraints of their monthly or bi-monthly events.

"Now we have pig-ears once a week," Kensler reported. "We wear out ears to dinner and snort our food. It's mostly just being foolish."

The Miss Piggy Fan Club doesn't take everything lightly, however. When the cafeteria recently served pork for a Miss Piggy dinner, the members of the fan club retaliated by starting a food fight.

Miss Peas, a KJL senior, swears the club represents an important idea.

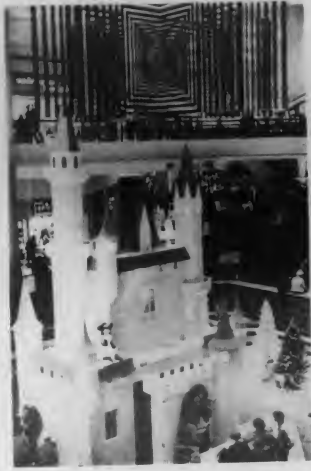

"I think there's some social stigma against the pig," Peas stated. "It's definitely a way to reveal against the establishment by being a pig."

Music forgotten in hustle and bustle

The Christmas season is upon us now. People rushing to get their shopping done, people rushing to make sure all the arrangements for the holiday are in order, but one overlooked aspect of the Christmas season is the music. Not many people have the time to pick out good seasonal music. The music can help put you in that Christmas mood on Christmas day and on the days before to get you thinking of the happy moments that await you.

Moods for Moderns
by MIKE SIMKUS

As I write my column this week I was listening to Tchaikovsky's The Nutcracker, Op. 71. The story of the girl Clara and her gift, the Nutcracker doll, is truly one of the best seasonal classical pieces Easily recognizable is the march, many companies play this song for their TV commercials. The version which I have is done by the National Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Kenneth Schermerhorn. This version appeared on public television last season with the "great" Baroque and will hopefully be so again this year.

(Of course, Handel's "Messiah" is the one record which is most familiar to the season of Christmas. There are so many versions of this great recording that I won't say they are Sir Malcolm Sargent conducting the Huddersfield Choral Society & The Royal Liverpool Philharmonic; Fryderyk Chopin on Seraphim; Also Hevstein conducting the New York Philharmonic; and Westminster Choir on CBS. Both choruses are done in English lyrics.

The Mormon Tabernacle Choir released a very fine recording last year, called "White Christmas." The record contains the classics "White Christmas," "Silver Bells," "Winter Wonderland," and many traditional Christmas songs. Also included in the record is a recipe booklet for the making of old-fashioned cranberry pudding and many other old Christmas recipes that can only be bought in a can today.

Christmas need not be officially here without the addition of himself, Bing Crosby. There are many good recordings of Crosby's voice, my personal favorite is "A Christmas Sing With Bing." The record contains "White Christmas," "Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas," and "Winter Wonderland" to name a few.

There are also plenty of individual lp's in this year which are collections of the featured artist singing the traditional songs. Artists such as Dean Martin, Frank Sinatra, Elvis Presley, Robert Goulet, Jim Nabors, Andy Williams, Engelbert Humperdinck, and even Jackie Gleason.

One of the better lp's in this year by a single artist is Luciano Pavarotti, the world's leading tenor. In his recording "O Holy Night," Pavarotti sings a program of sacred songs. Some of the songs are "O Come All Ye Faithful" and "O Come Let Us Adore Him," which are all done in Italian and Latin.

A favorite amongst the kids this year is John Denver and the Muppets. Also some of the older records from the Carpenters Christmas lp, the Beach Boys, and the Chipmunks.

The Christmas season would not be complete without a rock star or group entering an entry into the hopeful world of Christmas classics. Some of the songs released this year are Paul McCartney's "Wonderful Christmastime," The Eagles "Please Come Home For Christmas" and of course the big hit that never makes it but is released every year in the Singing Dogs' song "Jingle Bells."

Following the Christmas season in the champagne, party favor music: Guy Lombardo is the favorite, but do not overlook Benny Goodman and Glenn Miller.

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year, from the Moods For Moderns.

Munchies cause problems

Due to the fact that the cold winter months are upon us, many of us will be spending most of our time indoors. "Cabin fever" as it is called, takes its toll on dieters. When confinement is excessive, we tend to snack more.

The physiological effect of "cabin fever" makes us snack more even though we are not really hungry. We tend to get those sudden urges for food that lead up to a snack attack. But what we don't realize is the ingredients make up are our consumption of snacks.

Most of the time the snacks that are consumed aren't very nutritious at all. Many nutritious snacks are available in the house, but we tend to bypass these for more sugar filled items.

Some of these nutritious snacks were formulated by my brother and I as we began our struggle against our snack attacks. They are as listed below.

Proteins are a good snack. They are high in protein and low in calories.

Fruit is another nutritious source. They are natural carbohydrates and high in vitamin C.

New vegetables are also highly nutritious. They are natural, contain vitamins and are low in carbohydrates.

Yogurt is one of my favorites. This fruit filled tasty has ten grams of protein and helps in the digestion process.

Last but not least is popcorn, with just a minimum amount of butter, oil or salt. It is very low in calories. If salt is in it, eat in moderation. A vegetable, it fills you up fast so your cravings are limited.

Winter is the worst season to gain unwanted weight. Your physical activity is lessened. Therefore, calories are not burned off as fast.

Don't feel yourself thinking all your winter apparel will cover up your consumption of an unwanted weight.

Spring comes too soon and you'll be working yourself into a frenzy trying to get yourself back into shape. So snack sensibly and nutritionally and when spring arrives you'll walk with an air of confidence that comes along with a healthy looking body.

MIND AND BODY

Handling problems create eternal strength

"What would be my most successful career calling?"
 My first impression is how sensitive and yet how strong a person is portrayed in this chart! A great deal of potential is shown here with success possible in almost any pursuit.

My attention is drawn specifically to one area of the chart, the fourth house. This house symbolizes personal integration, the home and the family. The four planets located here symbolize possible difficulties in the early home life. It emphasizes your eventual need for the establishment of a secure home and family life, as well as a responsible and close tie to a marriage partner. This may be a challenge for you, but it would give you the basic foundation from which to draw necessary strength and power. Your chart indicates you are emotional, practical, intellectual, and intuitive. A very well balanced person. This can definitely be an advantage for you, for it can help you relate to anyone and everyone. This may be the key to your success, as well as the tremendous external energies of intuition that are inherently yours.

Astro Awareness
 by JILL REALY

Symbolized are intellectual interests and talents in musical or artistic fields. You also have fine abilities for positions involving business organization, management, politics, law, economics, scientific or occult research, real estate, etc. (training you apply yourself properly, you could be successful in any of these areas.)

You may find yourself feeling a sense of duty to society as you mature, and if you want personal satisfaction as well as success, I highly recommend for you to consider some kind of social integration and involvement through your work. strongly reflected in your chart is the need for personal self-expression of inner moods through social outlets. You should look for the means to give individual meaning to collective social ideas and values. Many of your own ideas may be "ahead of the times." You should seek for a situation where you can initiate them, and apply your knowledge and concrete use of the mind. You would excel in examination and reorganization of social, philosophical, religious, or political concepts.

You have the possibilities of reaching a high office of responsibility, integrity, and prominence that may affect much of society. The adjustments that you may have to make are the realizations of your own latent motives, strengths, and intuitions; not always depending on directions and guidance from others. You have to develop security from within yourself to be able to handle demands that may arise from a responsible position. You seem to have the tendency to want to please everyone all the time. While this is a highly commendable trait I wish more persons were like this; it could be personally detrimental, negatively affecting your decision making process.

Present contacts in your chart may bring you to consider moving in the not so distant future, and next year all this time some personal challenges may arise, creating difficulties. This will be the time to structure your values and ambitions, realize what you are really "cut out for", and build your self-reliance to establish personal security. It will also be the time to meet any gap differences you may possibly have had with your parents and family members.

As life continues, remember one thing, it's how you choose to handle the problems, and not the problems themselves, that create eternal strength in one. Anyone wishing astrological interpretations, please submit specific questions to the Harbinger office along with the required birth data. Look there for further details.

More albums of the year

by PETER WICKLAND

Trying to name up the best ten albums of 1979 was not that easy a chore for me. 1979 was not the most exciting music year we've ever had. Sure, there were great moments, but the year as a whole seemed so musically slow compared to last year. The reason for my audio boredom might be the fact that 1979 had so many super-super stars release albums where as 1978 only a couple did. Heck, new albums by the Rolling Stones, The Who, Bruce Springsteen, Neil Young and The Dead were more than I could handle. Springsteen alone would have probably perturbed up 79. I'm still suspicious that there was no real outstanding country album released this year. Country music has become too pop oriented. And, I'm sick of honey Rogers. Although I'm not a big jazz fan to begin with, I feel nothing that amazing came out of 1979. I picked the following ten albums because I believe their overall content contains the best music of the year.

Armed Forces - Elvis Costello (Columbia)
 The album is Costello's best material to date. His masterful way with his songs has paved the way for all power pop. Armed Forces is one of the most steady albums as far as content goes. The year sure started off in a bang with Armed Forces driving beat in such songs as "Oliver's Army" and "Goin' Squared".

Annie D'or - Renaissance (Sire)
 Annie D'or was by far the most underrated album of the year. Renaissance's experiment with full orchestration is a success. The material is powerfully enchanting.

Fear of Music-Talking Heads (Sire)
 Talking Heads continue their rhythmic, intellectual new wave with hypnotizing grace. The single "Cities" definitely follows the tradition of 1978's "Take me to the River" and 1977's "Psycho Killer".

Food Around - Rachel Sweet (Sire)

I admit it! I bought the album half for the cover. But, I don't regret it. Rachel Sweet is a cross of Tanya Tucker and the Supremes. The 17-year-old's early '60s rock is as over-sounding as her looks. Each you can go to the Wildwood Saloon with me any time you want.

In Through the Out Door - Led Zeppelin (Swan Song)
 All right, it's not Physical Graffiti. Still, it's good. Led Zeppelin the addition of orchestration grows on the listener with each playing of the record.

Into the Music - Van Morrison - Warner Bros.
 If religion was always as fun as the way Van delivers it, I'd go to church more often. Van adds spiritual uplifting to his own mystifying style.

Labour of Lust - Neck Lowe (Columbia)
 Johnny Cash's son-in-law continues his right to the post-pure pop. Labour of Lust is the perfect follow-up to last year's Pure Pop. For Now People. Love wastes no time punching out his rhythmic bass and outspoken lyrics. Labour of Lust surpasses Dave Edmunds' "Love's partner and guitarist" album.

Low Budget - Kinks (Arista)
 Ray Davies keeps up on current events with his ever so clever songs about money, gas and supermarkets.

The Records - Virgin
 The Records prove that Pop music, when done well, does not have to be artificially cool or conform to top 40 standards. The single "Starry Eyes" is so completely itself it's great. (Just) Never Sleeps - Neil Young (Reprise)

Faculty members question validity of evaluations

by MIKE BAMBACH

The recent uproar created by the publication of student evaluations in the Harbinger has provoked the question, "Just how valid are student evaluations in general?"

Inclussions done by two Harper faculty members, Robert Paasn and Robert Powell, it has been proven that grades received by a student have a definite correlation to the rating given to a teacher by a student.

Paasn, in a dissertation presented to Northwestern University, did a study using an English class in which each of the students in the class received a grade of 'A'. Paasn divided the class into majors, i.e., chemistry, economics, biology, journalism, and speech. Then he proved that, by major, the student's perception, or achievement in this particular English class, did not correlate in the rating given to the English teacher. For example, the chemistry major, while comprehending more than the other students in different majors, gave the English teacher a low rating of 4.1. In retrospect, the speech major, who had a lesser perception of achievement than any other student in the class, gave the English teacher a rating of 5.0—highest in the class.

You see, the chemistry major, while used to receiving lower grades, may have learned more than any student in the class, explained Paasn, "but, because of the high grade he received, he may think the teacher is (jumpy).

"And yet the speech major, who perceived less than any other student in the class," continued Paasn, "is accustomed to receiving high grades, and therefore feels no reason to give the teacher anything but a high rating.

Paasn also pointed out that chemistry majors in general have a grade point average of 2.6, while the speech major has an average GPA of 3.28. This supports Paasn's theory that, depending on a student's major, a student becomes accustomed to receiving certain grades. And this, he explains, becomes an influencing factor in teacher evaluations.

In his article that appeared in College English of January 1978, Powell points out that, "Students want grades, and if they don't get them they become very bitter.

He points out in his article that only once in 40 years of student evaluations have grades proven not to be an influencing factor in ratings given to a teacher. The study that disproved the grades-a-student-receives-and-the-ratings-gives-a-teacher theory was in 1938—almost 45 years ago. Since then, Powell points out, the correlation between grades received and ratings given has actually increased. Powell, however, is not wholly against student evaluations.

"If there was some way to point out to students which teacher is challenging without condemning the teacher," Powell said, "it might prove inviting to a student, who honestly wishes to be challenged, to enroll in that teacher's class."

Paasn agrees that evaluations can be helpful, but are now basically biased. "I don't think you can remove the bias from student evaluations. They certainly can be made to help a teacher learn from his students, but to make a general statement from a student's evaluation is impossible."

Profs major problem: marriage

CPS—Marriage, not sexual discrimination, may be the most important inhibitor of female professors' careers, according to research by University of Wisconsin sociologist Gerald Marwell. Marwell, who, along with sociologists Seymour Sherman of Columbia and Rachel Rosenfeld of the University of Chicago, tried to find out why there were so few women in top academic positions, discovered that women "often turn down better offers in other cities rather than disrupt their husbands' careers."

"On the other hand," he added, "women tend to move with their husbands when the husbands accept better positions."

Commuter marriages sometimes help both husband and wife get and hold top-level jobs, but Marwell found they don't "always work out. Eventually, one of them will probably quit his or her job so the couple can be together."

Indeed, a University of Michigan study released last January showed that women college presidents don't usually have much to do with families. Women presidents are much more likely to be single than male college presidents.

Most women college presidents say they get "emotional support" from their colleagues. Most male college presidents cite "family" as their major source of emotional support on their way up the academic ladder.

But Marwell cautioned that "we're not saying discrimination doesn't exist in academia. What we're saying is that another reason for the difficulty schools have in recruiting female professors is the geographic limitations marriage places on women."

Student leaders Bruce Zawa, and senators Mike Lannaway and Mark Rutledge give their support to the financially troubled game room by spreading snack at their free time played pool.

The financially troubled game room has been forced to start charging senators and other game room creators in an effort to cut losses. Photos by Lee Ison Gray.

Hawks destroy McHenry 109-78

by JOE KUSNEK

Boy, this is getting pretty nasty.

The Harper men's basketball team kept its winning streak going, extending it now to four straight victories by destroying McHenry 109-78 last Thursday night on the Hawks' home floor. Harper has now lost four games by margins of 13, 27, 42, and 31 and has outscored their opponents 502-247. In the process of winning every game in its path the Hawks are currently above the 500 mark for the first time this season, standing 4-3 overall and are undefeated in NAJ conference with a record of 2-0.

The Fabianis Series of McHenry were no match for Harper, as the Hawks outscored McHenry 18-13 in a three minute scoring rampage to open up a 19-8 lead less than one minute into the game.

"We're happy with the win, but we started to get sloppy at times, trying to rush things. We played in awkward tempo," said Harper head coach Roger Bechtold, after watching everyone on his team for the second straight game, get into the streakbook.

"We've been playing with more intensity this year. The difference from last year is our defensive aggressiveness forcing mistakes."

After the early scoring fireworks, the closed the Scis came up 14 points in the first half. The Scis connected on nine free throws, benefit as some very questionable fouls called on the Hawks but that was as close as they came as Tim Luginz drew down the foul and put in a bucket with a few seconds remaining to give the Hawks a lead of 30-20 at intermission.

The second half was almost a duplicate of the first, the Hawks adding 34 to their existing total and McHenry being only able to manage 10 again. The 19th point for the Hawks took a couple game action scoring record they had set earlier in the season, when they demolished Casson 100-78. If the game also started over in the second half the two teams would have almost been deadlocked, but Harper got hot again and rattled off a 21-11 burst to completely bury McHenry and coast in from there as Bechtold said everyone has some playing time.

"These games help us see what our role can do. They get the playing time now and then when we get them in pressure situations they will play up to their capabilities," said Bechtold.

"Tonight we had good guard pressure and overplay of the forwards. This has been our style, trying to have good defensive pressure and get our fast break going. It's an exciting style of play."

Harper takes on Lake County this Friday at home, but then instead of playing in some type of Christmas tournament have decided to just stay home and practice over the Christmas break. Their next game not being until they take on perennial NAJ power DuPage who finished second in the state last year. The Hawks receive their first and last test in a long time Saturday, Jan. 9.

Luginz led the Harper attack against McHenry with 24 points. Chris Plank bagged headline jumpers all night to finish with 20. Craig Hawkins had 18. Rob Fowles 12, Dave Strawn and Steve Jeffers chipped in eight points apiece. Tony Pawnsch had six. Brad Miller had four, and Doretrian Garner, Brian MacLean and Robert How all had two points for the winners.

The Christmas break will give us time to prepare and throw some new things in," said Bechtold, who also welcomes the break to give Jeff Martinko and Mike Bayless time to recover from injuries as the Hawks go straight into the meet of their schedule when school resumes.

Gymnastics loses first meet

by JOE KUSNEK

There are no Nadia Comaneci's or Olga Korbut's on the Harper women's gymnastic team, but after their first meet in two years, there were some promising performances.

The team held its first home meet ever after being disbanded last season and were edged out by Wheaton College, its four year school, 75-106-15.

"They did excellent for their first meet. The first meet pressure will help them prepare for the next meets coming up. They proved to themselves that they could get through the routines," said Harper coach Steve Zoller after her team's performance last Thursday afternoon.

"Part of it was first meet jitters. We've gotten the basics down on our routines, now we have to work on risk and perfecting items in gymnastics that just take time and practice. I think they are more experienced than I am."

Harper got some excellent performances, most notable from Mary Beth Black on the beam and floor-ex. Black received a score of 7.5 on her floor routine and a 7.9 on the beam. She also scored a 4.1 on vaulting.

Kathy Blake scored high on her floor routine receiving a 7.6 to go along with her 4.5 on the uneven bars. Sophomore Beth Polansky had the top Harper mark in vaulting, 4.25, she also scored a 5.05 on the uneven bars, 5.1 on floor-ex and 4.8 on the beam.

Other Harper scores included Cindy Curtis receiving a 6.05 mark on floor-ex. Sharon Noble a 5.95 on vaulting and Sandy Cullender a 4.95 on the uneven bars.

Their next home meet is Jan. 9, vs. DuPage at 4 p.m. All meets are held at 506 E. M.

Women's b-ball team struggling

The Harper women's basketball team, could beat one opponent, but not two at the same time.

The Hawks, in an important NAJ conference game against Joliet, not only had to cope with the Wolves but also some very questionable officiating in their 66-61 loss.

The Hawks found themselves down at the intermission 25-19, but did not throw in the towel, outscoring Joliet 41-11 in the second half to make the game close.

Harper's second half comeback was slowed down when high scoring forward sophomore Val Wedder fouled out with 7:46 remaining in the game. Wedder led the Harper scoring with 20 points.

Free throws are what proved the difference in the Hawks shot 14 of 23 from the line, while Joliet's game was played as Joliet was 23 of 32, benefit of quick whistles against Harper.

Kidley Pfander threw in 17 points along with grabbing eight rebounds. Lew Ann How also had double figures, chipping in 11 points and pulling down eight rebounds. Karen DeMons spearheaded the Harper defense, getting five steals and Val Wedder came off the bench to do an excellent job, in defense. Linda Arnett and Mary Ann Larson also came off the bench and played well.

The Hawks couldn't get back on the winning track for NAJ play as they lost to a top-rated Rock Valley team 73-59.

Harper let Rock Valley get too much of a lead at halftime and could not make up the difference the second half.

Rock Valley put in 11 straight points after the Hawks scored first, but Rock Valley was able to get off second and third shot attempts to open up their lead but had finished the evening with 25 points, 10 in the second half. Pfander also hit in double figures again, this time pouring in 18 for Harper.

The Hawks now stand 3-4 overall and 0-2 in NAJ conference play, while Rock Valley covered their record to 3-5 overall and 1-1 in NAJ action.

Harper takes the court against Marquette Valley, Dec. 19 at Marquette Valley at 7 p.m. They next wait until Jan. 5 in another NAJ conference game vs. Illinois Valley, 5:30 p.m. at Illinois Valley.

Reynolds wraps up intramurals

by MIKE RAMBACH

The Harper intramural program is turning the proverbial corner. Branching out from last year's informal "Sports Night" at St. Vrain High School, the intramural program now has a home it can call its own, a basic organization, and more importantly, student interest.

Wally Reynolds, coordinator of intramurals and recreation, said earlier in the year that this first year of intramurals would be a "teasing out year," a time for us to get to know what the students want and will respond to.

And, so far, Reynolds is pleased with what he has seen. "I have seen enough interest to justify our program. But," he added, "I'm an idealist. I'd like to see 50 or 60 students at an activity, that's just 30 and so."

As he did at the beginning of the year, Reynolds made it clear that the success of the intramural program lies with the students.

"They (the students) have to make their needs and wants known," he added, "We can't do everything people have petitioned for, but we certainly can try to do as much as we can."

A basic problem in the early stages of the intramural program was organization, or rather the lack of it. Reynolds said. Now, the intramural program is blessed with M building, which was completed in November, and Reynolds plans to circulate a pamphlet outlining intramural activities, the times of the various activities, and eligibility requirements.

"The M building gives us a focal point to plan and house the activities," he said. "It gives us an identity."

Planning the intramural activities has been the smallest obstacle in Reynolds' attempt to build a solid intramural program.

"We've formed an intramural committee to plan and suggest intramural activities," he said. "So far, we've turned out seven or eight activities for the student to participate in."

This semester, such activities as "print writing," flag football, a billiards tourney, and a free-throw contest have been among the events sponsored by the intramural program.

For next semester, Reynolds has planned a floor-hockey club, a Wednesday night basketball league and open gym sessions.

"Wednesday night basketball should bring us our biggest turnout of the year," he said.

"We expect the open gym to become very popular with the students also."

As for the future of Harper's intramural program, Reynolds looks toward the physical education classes.

"The best way to run the intramurals would be through PE classes. For instance, those taking the volleyball class would be in a better position to set up their own playing times because they are already involved in a class," he said.

"So, the best thing for the students to get involved in intramurals is to sign up for classes," he added.

Reynolds would also like to see more faculty participants in intramural activities.

"A few faculty members turned out for the Harperton (on Homecoming weekend) but I think if the faculty became more involved with the intramurals it would help them get more involved with the students."

Wally Reynolds, currently coordinator of intramurals and recreation has been named the Harper's volleyball coach for the first season. Reynolds, who is replacing Steve Blanton who has college coaching experience but ran the intramural baseball program this fall. (photo by Rick Kubahek)

Building I ready, J's opening temporarily delayed

by WENDY WINKELHARK

Due to bad weather last year and general construction delays, Building J will not open today as scheduled. However, Bldg. J has been completed and classes will meet as scheduled on Bldg. J.

Day classes scheduled for Bldg. J have been moved to alternate areas. Several conference rooms, meeting rooms and laboratories have been converted to temporary classrooms.

Evening classes scheduled for Bldg. J will meet in District 211 high school.

"It's a very temporary thing," said Elaine Stoermer, college relations specialist. "Before classes can begin operating in Bldg. J, electrical work and painting must be completed. Furniture and equipment will be moved in after a thorough cleaning of the building.

According to Ms. Stoermer, the work will be completed sometime in the "near future."

The two buildings, located on the southeast corner of the campus, will house the Business and Social Science Division. A six seat lecture hall will adjoin the buildings thus giving a total of 32 instructional facilities.

A number of specialized facilities will be featured in the new buildings such as a marketing lab, a data processing lab, typing rooms and a child care lab. The child care lab has its own washroom facilities, direct access to an outside playground and a kitchenette.

The lecture hall contains upholstered seats, a raised lecture area and wooden acoustic walls. It will be used for movies, public speakers and possibly by the Harper Players. Also included will be a faculty staff lounge.

Harper received the green light for the construction of the 15 million dollar buildings in 1973. The buildings were constructed by the EKS Architectural Firm.

Johnson receives 25 year murder sentence

Ivan Johnson, convicted murderer of Harper coed Patricia Baldwin, has been sentenced to 25 years in prison for the killing. Johnson, 25, also received a 10 year sentence for the attempted murder of Miss Baldwin's companion, Harper student Steve Bush. The 10 year term will run concurrently with the longer sentence.

Judge Edward Saska Jr. handed down the sentence Nov. 30 in Evanston branch of the Cook County Circuit Court. Saska found Johnson guilty of the murder and attempted murder on October despite defense arguments that Johnson was psychotic at the time of the March 1 murder.

Defense attorney Rick Halprin said Thursday he will appeal the case. Halprin said he has already filed a notice of appeal and it would be at least six to eight months before the preliminary process leading to an appeal would be completed.

Halprin said the grounds for appeal are "very technical. I don't know how I'd be able to evidence it in an explanation." He summed it up by saying the appeal would be made on the grounds of "judicial error."

Halprin said he had no comment on the outcome of the trial and refused to release the name of the prison to which Johnson had been sent. "I think that is personal and confidential information," he said.

Johnson, Miss Baldwin and Bush were all members of the hearing impaired program at Harper when the murder occurred. Johnson and Miss Baldwin had dated but broke up. Miss Baldwin then started dating Bush. Prior to the murder, Johnson had slapped Miss Baldwin in the face during a confrontation in the Harper cafeteria. A security guard from the college was assigned to escort Miss Baldwin to class following that attack but the guard was dropped after no further incidents occurred.

On March 1, however, Johnson attacked Miss Baldwin and Bush in the Harper parking lot, fatally stabbing Miss Baldwin in the chest and stabbing Bush in the neck. Police later arrested Johnson after tracking him to St. Michael (the Archangel) cemetery south of the campus.

Defense lawyer Halprin attempted to prove Johnson was insane at the time of the attack by calling in psychiatrists to testify. Dr. Eugene Minda testified that Johnson killed the girl in order to end recurring dreams in which she appeared to him as a monster. The defense argued Johnson was unable to distinguish his dreams from reality.

Exhibits featuring career programs, continuing education courses and student activities were on display at Woodfield Mall over the break as part of the "Discover the 80's" program.

Local radio stations handle closings

College closings due to inclement weather will be announced over 11 area radio stations this winter. Students and faculty are urged by the administration not to call the college's switchboard to obtain closure information.

Announcements will be made over the following radio stations: WGN, 720 AM; WIND, 560 AM; WLS, 960 AM; WMAZ, 670 AM; WRBM, 780 AM; WMMB, 92.2 FM; WMBT, 96.5

FM; WNIJ, 89.3 FM; WYHL, 102.2 FM; WLTP, 99 FM; and WKXJ, 101 FM.

It is a campus closing is necessary before a radio announcement can be made, faculty supervisors will be asked to contact department personnel.

If severe weather conditions make it necessary to close the campus during school hours, notification will be given to all staff and students.

Ascrow assists in problem

S.P. Ascrow Associates, an architectural engineering firm, has been investigating all campus buildings for any structural weaknesses.

The investigation began when a spandrel fell from Bldg. A. It has been repaired but no definite conclusion on why it fell has been reached.

Currently, a spandrel between Bldg. C and P appears to be sagging because of design similarities between Bldg. A and P. An investigation is determining the appropriate corrective measures is underway.

Ascrow Associates will study drawings of the buildings and prepare a report on the measures that need to be taken. As a safety measure, any ex-traves and adjoining areas of Bldg. P have been partitioned off and scaffolding placed under the sagging spandrel.

Contributions hit new mark

A total of $2,551.88 was contributed by administrators, faculty and staff for the 1979 Harper College Crusade of Mercy campaign. The contribution represents a 91 percent increase over last year's figure of $1,334.90.

The 1978 breakdown of contributions in: 25 administrators, with pledges of $1,221; 58 faculty with pledges of $1,100; 89 classified staff with pledges of $965.88; 18 members of Local 11 with pledges of $194. In addition, $41 in change was collected in the book store, game room and cafeteria.

Editorial Harbinger redefines policy

The beginning of a semester brings a number of changes. New classes, new teachers and "new management" of the Harbinger. Thus, it is a fitting time to redefine Harbinger policy.

As in the past, news reporting will remain fair and accurate. News directly relating to the college, students, faculty or administration will be given top priority. Announcements concerning clubs and various other campus organizations will be handled through the "Upcoming" section of the newspaper.

In the feature section, the various facets of the campus and student life will be highlighted. Also included here will be "Viewpoints" columns dealing with various subjects such as music, astrology or physical fitness.

Equal attention will be given to men's and women's sports. Whenever possible, a schedule of upcoming sporting events will be printed. Intramural information can also be found in this section.

Students can turn to the editorial page for the Harbinger's view of various happenings. Signed letters to the editor will be printed in this section.

In addition to this, student ideas for stories, pictures or overall improvement of the paper are always welcome.

With the cooperation of students and staff, the Harbinger can keep its reporting at the high level of quality already established.

Sexual double standards dying

(CPS) — The sexual double standard is dying. At least that is the finding of Patricia MacCorquodale, assistant professor of sociology at University of Arizona and John DeLamater of the University of Wisconsin.

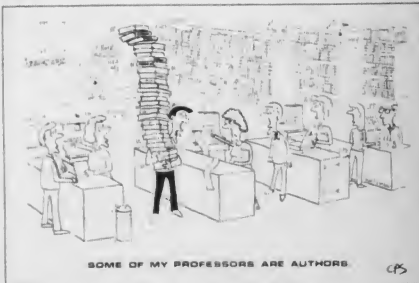

MacCorquodale and DeLamater recently reported the results of a survey of 100 to 20 year olds in a small Midwestern city. One thousand of the subjects polled were college students.

"We hear a lot of talk these days about the sexual revolution," MacCorquodale observes, "but what we found is that people's focus has shifted from doing or not doing to relationships, what each couple thinks is acceptable."

MacCorquodale attributes the change in the sexual double standard to overall changes in women's roles. "People aren't as quick to accept differences in the roles of men and women anymore," she says. Of those polled, only 5 percent of the men and 13 percent of the women disapproved of sex without the benefit of marriage. MacCorquodale noted that more men than ever before approve of premarital sex. Men as a traditionally accepted premarital sex more readily than women.

"In any couple the man will accept premarital sex earlier than the woman," MacCorquodale said, indicating that the double standard is not altogether dead. But, when asked what conditions respondents thought were acceptable for women and when it was acceptable for men, most indicated little difference of opinion, regardless of sex.

Future hints dropped

As a new decade faces us, many ponder and reflect upon the history that we have created. One that we live in and the future that we are headed for. Human nature seems to be one of endless curiosity, constantly searching for what will come next.

As an astrologer, I have one slight advantage. I've got at least a few clues to work with. Therefore, I will share my insights, if you bear with me, on the trends that may be in store for some of us throughout this new year.

For those born on dates between No. 13th, (Scorpio) and May 12th, (Taurus), 1980 will bring a new phase in your life. You may feel restless sometime throughout the year and some radical change may take place. The astrological contact that will be made to your Sun in the planet Uranus, which has been nicknamed "The Awakener." Your individuality and independence may become very important to you. It will be a period of self-realization, and a time to "break away" or change. Don't try to guess what or when, for Uranus is associated with suddenness and the unexpected.

Virgo, and to a lesser degree Pisces, born between the dates of Sept. 15-23, and Mar. 12-20, may feel the Saturnian vibrations of restriction and hardships. Responsibilities may pile up. Your energy level may be low, your attitudes may become downright serious toward your health. Don't worry, or let setbacks get you down. Learn what you can from it all. This is a good time to really crackdown on yourself and structure your life. Begin to build towards your goals and ambitions by September, the worst will be over.

In the fall, Libra and Aries born between Sept. 24 and Oct. 3, and Mar. 21-30, may begin to feel the same kind of effects, sometime within the remainder of 1980.

Sagittarius and Gemini born on the dates between Dec. 11-14, and June 18-21, may be feeling the effects of the slow moving planet Neptune throughout most of the year. For you, this should be a searching year. You may feel as if you lack direction. Look inside yourself, find the deeper meanings of life. Turn your intuition, try to develop it, for this is the best time. Investigate, create, opportunities be prepared for.

narratives, but don't end up playing the martyr's role. Develop your awareness and spirituality. Watch your ability, and make sure you can distinguish between reality and abstract impossibility.

Libra, born approximately Oct. 14-18, have a long term planetary contact to their Sun. From the furthest, most eccentric planet, Pluto, much of the audience is subconscious and may not manifest externally. However, this symbolizes a very slow change, a type of personal transformation.

Don't struggle against letting go of old ideas or change tactics. A personal part of you must die to make room for new growth on a higher level.

All of my remarks are based on planetary contacts that will occur to certain sun signs, at certain times. I have mentioned only the most obvious, and therefore, not all of the signs are included though I'm sure that life will stand still with them. Without precise astrological charts I cannot possibly comment on them all, but only the most significant general trends.

Anyone interested in personalized astrological interpretations please submit specific questions and complete sign data. (Date, City, Sex, Exact Time, AM or PM) to the Harbinger Office Located in 1016 A.

Three areas of M building still undergoing work

Three areas in the new physical education building are being repaired as the result of problems that have occurred since the facility opened last semester. The swimming pool, racquetball courts, and the wrestling room are all undergoing correctional work.

Work on the pool is nearly completed. A major leak was discovered after the pool was first filled. A final completion date has not been set for the pool work.

The racquetball courts had some plaster fall out of the wrestling room where leakage from the outside walls has occurred. This problem has been corrected but is still being observed for any further leakage. The athletics department hopes that all repairs will be completed by the second eight weeks of this semester.

Board agrees to continue current cash refund policy

Harper's Board of Trustees agreed to continue an 11-year-old policy of refunding cash to students who have dropped courses rather than reimbursing students on a check-only basis.

The issue was raised by Trustee George Dasher at the Jan. 10 board meeting when the board was asked to approve $30,000 in funds to be paid out as cash refunds to students. Dasher questioned why all refunds couldn't be made by check, thus eliminating paperwork needed to provide receipts and records and giving the board a better idea how many students actually drop courses and why.

Trustee Jan Bone added that the board has long been concerned with the number of refunds the college issues, and whether the board is getting a "true picture" of the number of students dropping classes.

Both trustees said they feared the cash refunds would not provide the board with the information it has requested on how many and why students drop courses at Harper.

Anton Dolejs, director of finance, told the board, refunding by check takes a long time and "there are students who want cash. They don't want a check, they want the cash right now." He said students who pay in cash want cash refunds. Students who pay by check can only receive a cash refund if their check has cleared the bank, he said. Dolejs said the $30,000 would cover about 300 cash refunds. He added that students are still required to fill out forms explaining why they are dropping the course before a refund is given.

Dasher said the policy "sounds like a force of habit, not a good management procedure," but voted to approve the funds. The motion to approve the $30,000 passed unanimously.

In other action, the board received an update on the "falling open-dref" problem discovered where buildings P and C connect. The college received an estimate of about $15,000 to repair the spandrel. Arow & Associates, the architectural engineering firm that has been hired as a consultant on special projects and has worked with the college on the spandrel problems since July 1979, is going to analyze the structural condition of the total campus, said Harper Pres. James McGrath.

"There are other spots on the campus I'm concerned about," McGrath said. The tentative cost estimate of the campus analysis from Arow is $10,000. The fee includes a visual check of buildings, a report with recommendations for repairs, preparation of bid specifications and construction observation.

Pres. McGrath told the board a donation of $250 was made to Harper by Underwriter's Laboratories. The college also received a donation of a computer and an anonymous faculty member has donated $5,000 to Harper's scholarship fund.

Pres. McGrath reported that the Harper display at Woodlands Mall in early January resulted in 56 applications for enrollment and about 500 inquiries from potential students.

Fire code inspections have been completed at Harper College and no major violations have surfaced.

Elaine Stoermer, director of College Relations, said that the inspection report from the Palatine Fire Department has been received by Harper President James McGrath and is awaiting final approval by the board of trustees.

Ms. Stoermer said that some minor recommendations were given by the fire department and that the college is acting promptly on the department's advice. The Palatine Fire Department Fire Prevention Bureau will conduct regular inspections in the future.

"We've always had a good working relationship with the Palatine Fire Department," Stoermer said. According to Ms. Stoermer, the college has frequently called the fire department for advice on such matters as the disposal of chemicals.

The inspections were prompted by a story in the Dec. 6, 1979, edition of The News, an annual journalism department lab paper, questioning campus fire safety.

Careful voting essential in any board elections

How many people are aware of the upcoming Board of Trustees elections? How many people know that four of the seven board seats are open for election? How many people are aware of the consequences if careful, conscientious voting does not take place?

With a majority of the seats open, special interest groups would have ample opportunity to move in and gain control of the board. Thus, more attention would be focused on the objectives and interests of the group rather than those of the college.

Voters must rally together in order to overcome these possibilities. Year after year, it seems that the only people that vote are those directly related to areas the board is concerned with. But decisions made throughout the year by the board affect the entire community no matter how trivial they may seem at the time.

When casting their ballots, voters should take into consideration the various candidates' views of Harper and the overall Harper community and not vote for the name that sounds the best. The entire makeup of the board can change and literally thousands of people hang in the balance.

Therefore, by exercising their voting privileges, voters will not only be able to put their effort to place the best people in office, but also block the paths of any groups which may abuse the power the board holds.

If good judgment and common sense are not practiced in this election, the spendrels may not be the only things falling down at Harper.

BEOG loans given in wrong amounts

WASHINGTON, DC (UPI) — More than half the Basic Educational Opportunity Grants (BEOG) given out in 1975-79 were awarded in the wrong amounts to students. A U.S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) report has found that 53 percent of the awards were either overpaid or underpaid and that the major reason was that the BEOG application forms were so complicated.

Among the two million students who participated in the BEOG program, about 720,000 got an average of $397 more financial aid than they were entitled to. About 308,000 students were underpaid by an average $231 each.

Most of the errors could be traced to "problems" encountered by students and institutions in filling out and handling a complicated application form. Most of the errors, moreover, concerned estimates of families' financial status.

1980: College's 'Year of Money'

by Julian Weiss

WASHINGTON, D.C. (UPI) — The education issues that Congress will consider during 1980 may not be as dramatic as the 1979 struggles over equal rights for women athletes or the creation of the U.S. Dept. of Education, but what they lack in drama they will make up in vehemence. For 1980 will be college Year of Money in Congress as politicians wrestle over legislation that will influence high education funding through 1985.

The trench warfare over funding will climax with the debate over the proposed Higher Education Reauthorization Act of 1980 (the lobbyist predicts a "wild and woolly" debate). Others see it as a particularly bitter fight over what kind of direction higher education should follow during the next half decade.

The reauthorization bill will serve as Congress' enabling legislation for virtually all federal high education programs to final shape and emphasis. It will tell a lot about what will happen in various programs through 1980, when another reauthorization bill will have to be passed.

The House passed its version of the act in the fall by a whopping 385-16 vote, much to the joy of the education lobby. The House, after all, increased funding for a variety of financial aid programs — BEOGs, SEOGs, work study, and NISLA, among others — from $5 billion to $7 billion.

The bill, moreover, provides a new formula for distributing financial aid that will pay for 70 percent — up from the previous 50 percent limit — of the cost of education for eligible students. It was nothing less than "a fantastic bill," according to Joel Packer, who steps down this month as lobbyist for the House Postsecondary Education Subcommittee.

Now, however, the bill must go to the Senate, where sentiment seems to be strongly in favor of cutting education funding.

Education lobbyists see some cause for optimism in the action by the committee — chaired by Sen. Claiborne Pell (D-R.I.) — to raise funding for National Endowment for the Humanities and the National Endowment for the Arts for the next fiscal year. Both programs work with the help fund college programs.

After the Senate completes its version of the bill, of course, it will go to a Senate House conference committee to iron out what promises to be substantive differences in funding and philosophy. It is there that the issue of higher education funding through the first half of the new decade will probably be decided.

The Congressional Budget Office projects that the House version would authorize around $6 billion for college programs through 1985. While that figure doesn't insure a bright funding future for federal college programs, it is considerably higher than many lobbyists had expected from this Congress. Even so, more programs might be threatened.

The reauthorization bill, though the most important single piece of education legislation this year, isn't the only college issue due for debate in 1980. Among the more important ones:

A 1979 General Accounting Office report declared the government's method of evaluating and funding "developing institutions" was "largely unworkable." Some "developing" schools, governmentwide for some two-year colleges — were actually found ineligible for federal aid last year. The discovery may be put in legislative form this session.

Harbinger takes easy victory over WHCM

While most students left the Harper campus as quickly as possible after first semester final exams, and headed for the nearest bar to forget their trouble, the Harbinger staff was demonstrating to WHCM (Harper's radio station) and Student Senate what the game of basketball was all about.

The Harbinger used a tenacious defense and devastating fast break to wrap up an easy victory. The Harbinger might have been short on numbers but were long in talent as they showed what teamwork on the court was all about.

Psssst! Do you wanna know a secret?

Remember when you were a kid and you had baseball cards that were your only reason for living from week to week during the "baseball season"? Remember when you had the one baseball card that all of your friends could not get, and the system you had among your pals?

Well, don't let time go by longer in memory any longer, not in our baseball trading card time just yet. Just, it is time for the newest album from a local group which will be the hottest group in the country in the few months that are ahead. The new group is OH Breadway, you may have been fortunate to see them early this year in the local clubs, and you can be just as fortunate if you pick up the new LP on OH Breadway is a band which has an attitude of P.U.N.

Moods for Moods

by MIKE SINKS

Cliff Johnson, lead singer and chief songwriter, has been in local groups such as D "Thumbs and Fingers" and has, as it appears, struck it rich with songs which should be gold smashes. The sound of the group is similar to the sound of Cheap Trick, but has a rougher edge in vocals and guitar work. OH Breadway is also managed by the same Cheap Trick manager wizard Ken Adamany. The group, in case you have missed them, live, feature the old lightbulb and pull-chain fixtures to give them the image of a garage band. No cheap gimmicks, just hard driven rock 'n' roll (in which is great to dance to).

Every day when you turn away from your world boy ignoring your life and oh, what a shame boy stay in time don't get out of line take a stand that's out of hand, use your head you might as well be dead if you don't boy. This is the opening cut in the record which also the opening song in their disc set. The song like many other songs is hummable, and have some value as socially significant statement.

If the world revolved around you, we would try to escape in Mars, if you take our rocket fuel we're gonna escape in earth, you try to steal our girlfriends we're gonna cut you down you come around our neighborhood, gonna run you out of town gonna run you out of town." This is a hard indication, the chorus is catchy after a couple of plays and has a beat similar to Cheap Trick.

"Lookin' back all I ever wanted was to go to school and get a rockin' band play in all the clubs could be ready cool we got a date Friday night a mixer at the high school gym, the band was a bit everybody tuckin' till the jacks rolled in who let them in." This is the song which could be the alternative to the "macho man" which is so cool these days. This song is called, "Bully." This is also a good choice for the people who are nothing in school, but, who become somebody later.

"There's a chill that I get, when she push back your hair and she pull the cigarette from your mouth, and she say 'I don't care' as she push back her hair, you politely throw her out." The baby boom generation has received so much attention lately, Krauser vs. Krauser, and this seems to be aimed towards them. But, it also applies to all the divorced males who have succumbed in the struggle for possessions and emotions.

The music off Breadway plays in line for dancing, and great to sing along to. OH Breadway is the best kept secret in the Midwest, but as the word leaks out on how fine this band is, it will be impossible to see them in the local clubs and more importantly their records will be all sold out. I urge you not to miss this group in our area, support our local groups, because it seems that once they leave our area most groups may they are from some other state, and out from the great city of Chicago agree.

Social honor, respect, high responsibility found in Capricorn

"Dear Juli, is it a good idea to be taking on a top position of an organization in the near future?"

Here again, I see the focus of this chart in the fifth house of creative self-expression. These planets, as well as the Sun, are placed in the responsible, serious, ambitious sign of Capricorn. This indicates one who can achieve social honor and respect, or a professional position of high responsibility, especially, if applied to a creative field.

The planet, Mars, which represents capacities for leadership is highly elevated in the tenth house of goals and worldly ambitions. Yes, you would do well in a leadership position requiring initiative and organization that since you are not outwardly the aggressive type, some people may fail to recognize your leadership abilities, and your skills may have to be proved to be accepted.

You appear to others to be modest, practical, and very well organized. Maybe even a little picky. With your Sun in Capricorn, you are probably always conscious of gaining social approval. I'm sure you set very high standards for yourself, as well as expecting the same from everyone else. But, watch out and don't get too critical of those around you, not everyone may feel the same drive towards perfection as you do.

Even though you are basically an introverted type of person, getting along with people should be easy for you. You seem to be very responsive and sensitive to the feelings of others, intuitively knowing just how to deal with them. This can be a great advantage for you, for one of the challenges associated with 'top' positions

by JULI REALY

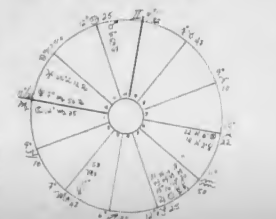

is the ability to be a good "people person." However, you must be able to differentiate when your emotional sensitivity is advantageous, and when it could interfere with your responsibilities. You shouldn't let sentiment get in the way of duty.

Personnel management, teaching, social work, writing, publishing, communications, insurance and banking are a few areas you may be successful in whatever field you might get involved in, you should strive to work at a managerial or organizational capacity for this is where your strongest talents lie.

My only recommendation to you is to always be consciously aware of your attitudes towards life. You may be a little too pessimistic at times, tending to wear down your energy level through too much worrying. This can negatively affect not only your own life, but the lives of those around you as well. Remember, if you're at the "top," people depend on you for inspiration! Don't always be so serious. Work at being an optimist, look at the bright side of things. It may make life's difficulties a little easier to handle.

Anyone who may be interested in astrological interpretations may submit specific questions along with the required birth data to the Harbinger Office located in Bldg. AWP. Look there for further details. Birth data is printed with chart. Date: 01/06/41 Time: 9:06 PM Place: Elgin, IL.

Taiwan team shows Harper how to play the game

by JOE KUSEK

It was definitely an experience. A national women's team from Taiwan, sponsored by China Airlines, gave a basketball clinic on how to run a half break and use outside shooting to the utmost. Unfortunately, they were playing the Harper women's team at the same time.

The Harper women were clearly out-manned (or out-personnelled) if you prefer, but had the Taiwan team on the ropes, leading at one time 21-19 before running out of gas. The final score reading Taiwan 100, Harper 66.

The game was set up when both teams had an opening in their respective schedules and Harper president James McGrath went through the necessary channels to get the game arranged. The plan was not finalized until the Monday before the game.

Harper is running a series of seminars in May through our business division and one of the seminars is going to be on International Trade. One of the people on the planning committee was helping the team out and called to ask if we would play them as they were going to be stopping over in Chicago after their game in St. Louis. "I hope the game came to be 'luckily everything worked out. We had two women, one to make sure the gym was free and two was to check baggage rules," NAC Conference if it was okay if we played an extra game. "I hope to bring more things like this to the campus, we've invited them back next year. But their team manager said they only four about every two years, so hopefully we'll see them two years from now."

The national team showed some outside shooting that would make any NBA player jealous. The Hawks were somewhat lucky there in not such a thing as a three point play in women's college basketball. The Taiwan center hit an incredible 24.1 percent from the floor. A number that is considered good for men's college from the free throw line. "We can't shoot that well in free throws. They shoot well, run well, it's the way we hope we can play. They were too quick and way too fast. They kept running and tired us out," said women's coach Tom Tenbaker. "I knew they'd be fast from the way international competition is played. We were very respectable for the first 15 minutes."

The Taiwan team had a devastating fast-break, constantly coming down court with 3 on 1 or 2 on 1 situations. The touring team used effective long range passing and it was obvious to everyone attending that the players had been together for quite awhile as they were always right where they should have been in their fast-break. "I never ran so hard in my life

Val Widener goes up for two of her 22 points while teammate Kathy Pfaender (44 blocks) rebounds for Leil Yastusky. Pfaender scored 22 points for the Hawks. "I've never seen anybody shoot like that, but it was a lot of fun."

Harper wins 78-53

by JOE KUSEK

Maybe this one will last somewhat longer. The Harper men's basketball team snapped a three-game losing streak, when they defeated Illinois Valley, 78-53, in an NAC conference game at Harper Hawks home court last Thursday night, to start their winning streak.

Harper, who had been playing a man-to-man defense earlier in the season, switched to a 2-3 Apaches. This forced Illinois Valley to shoot from way out, but they could only manage 39 per cent accuracy from the show the 500 mark once again for the season. Harper now stands 8-3 overall and 4-2 in NAC conference action.

"I'm pleased with the victory, Illinois Valley is a good ball club. We needed this win, we had lost three in a row, now we'll try and build another winning streak," said Harper coach Roger Bechtold. "I thought our guards, Logan, Dave Strawn and Pfaender, did great jobs on our zone defense and I thought Craig (Hawman) and Jeff (Martinski) did a great job on the boards. That shot selection was good and we showed a lot of patience on offense."

"We went to the slow-down because they were never out of the game and we didn't want to let them back us (our defense intensity was good tonight. I was happy with the staff because we went to the slow-down during the stretch and did a good job on it."

Bechtold also praised the play of Brad Miller, who has been coming off the bench and playing well for the Hawks.

Harper was led in scoring again by Logan who hit for 22 points and also had nine assists and two steals. Hawman, who has hit in double figures for almost every Harper game had 16 for the Hawks along with leading all rebounders pulling down 12 boards. Martinski had 11 rebounds and put in 18 points for the winner, with Rob Horney adding eight points of his own and Pfaender and Miller having six points apiece.

Triton drops Hawks

by JOE KUSEK

If only four players took the court for Triton, the Hawks would have won by almost 20. But instead, Triton also had Johnnie Walker, who hounded the Hawks for 35 points in leading his team to a 78-71 victory over Harper last Tuesday night. The Trojanians defeated the Hawks three second night and second NAC setback in a row. The Hawks lost to Joliet 84-66 the previous Saturday.

Harper was led in scoring by Tom Logan, who jumped in 19 for the Hawks. Craig Hawman poured in 15, again hitting in double figures and Brad Miller came off the bench to add 11 points. Dave Strawn and Jeff Martinski had eight points apiece and Rob Horney added six.

Harper fought itself trailing, 41-32 at halftime, but pulled within four as Martinski got hot and bagged three buckets in a row. Logan hit an two jumpers from the ball breaking up a Triton fast break. He then took 4 all the way downcourt and there in a reverse left-handed lay-up to knock the score up at 51 all with 13 minutes left on the clock.

Triton answered with four points. Jeff Logan and Miller responded with four free throws to tie it up at 61-61.

But Triton's Wesley took over and hit three straight jumpers and led three Harper players added two more on a turn-around and scored his team's last three points on a stuff shot that turned into a three-point play when he was fouled.

"I'm proud of the team playing," said Harper coach Roger Bechtold after his team had faced the state-ranked Trojanians. "I was concerned after the Joliet loss but our intensity was there again. I thought we played with character."

The Hawks were out-rebounded 41-42, and both teams shot somewhat poorly from the field. Triton only hit 39 per cent of their shots and the Hawks only hitting 35 per cent of theirs, the low percentages due to both teams' field defenses.

Women gymnasts win at DuPage

by JOE KUSEK

One can hear the muttering now. Many junior colleges are probably wishing for the old Harper days (last year when Harper did not have a women's gymnastics team).

The team brought it life again this year, is already establishing itself as one of the top junior college teams in Illinois and with every meet improve its chance of going to the nationals come February.

The team took its biggest test toward the nationals when it won the DuPage Invitational, defeating Triton one of the few teams that compete on the regional level.

The Hawks took home the first place trophy with 41.55 points while Triton was runner-up with 21.1 and host DuPage 64.20.

Out of the four events, Harper won three and placed second in two others. The scores were 12 on the beam with Mary Beth Black taking first place hours with a score of 4.5. Anne Berger won vault behind, taking second with a score of 4.8.

Black then came back to capture first place in the floor, by edging teammate Kathy Blake by 0.65 points. Black impressed the judges enough to earn a score of 7.8, while Blake scored a 8.0 for another Harper victory.

Sandy Colglazier with the sweeper bars by hitting her best score of the year with a 7.5. Colglazier's previous best going into the meet was a 6.8.

Anne Berninger, was the overall winner with an all-around score of 35.80. The only event Harper didn't win, they finished second and third. Barb Pulver placed second netting a score of 23 and Berney placed third earning a 1.2.

"I think even though we win we know there's more than anything else that we need more meet experience," said coach Bruce Zoller. "The girls are really working hard, now we're working on setting our routines sharper, then we'll add more difficulty."

The women will try and continue their winning ways when they host a dual meet vs Triton Tuesday, starting at 4 p.m. Then Thursday they travel to Lewisdale for a 7 p.m. meet.

Illinois Valley closed within eight, 32-44 with 11-31 remaining in the game, but the Hawks rattled off 11 points on buckets by Logan, Hawman and Brad Miller to tie it up at 42-42 with 3:09 showing on the clock.

Harper then went into a stall, forcing Illinois Valley to come out and foul in an attempt to get the ball. The Hawks used the game with Chris Pfanzak putting four free throws and Mike Boyles leading a bucket.

The Hawks whose next game is when they take on Wright-Union Tuesday, starting at 4 p.m. Then Thursday they travel to Lewisdale for a 7 p.m. meet.

Harper was led in scoring by Tom Logan, who jumped in 19 for the Hawks. Craig Hawman poured in 15, again hitting in double figures and Brad Miller came off the bench to add 11 points. Dave Strawn and Jeff Martinski had eight points apiece and Rob Horney added six.

Harper fought itself trailing, 41-32 at halftime, but pulled within four as Martinski got hot and bagged three buckets in a row. Logan hit an two jumpers from the ball breaking up a Triton fast break. He then took 4 all

Draft meets mixed reactions

by WENDY WENZELHAK

Harper students met President Carter's decision on the reinstatement of the Special Services System with mixed reactions.

Carter announced that he would be sending a proposal to Congress to reinstate the system. The proposal would most likely require 18-month-olds to register if the draft is re-enacted. This announcement came last Wednesday evening during the annual State of the Union Address and proved to be a major topic of discussion around the Campus.

Most students polled held negative views on the reinstatement. The main concern of those polled was the threat of war.

"I look at it this way; if there is a draft there is a war coming up I want to live, get married and have kids," stated Robert Smith, 18.

Deacy McClelland, 18, feels that "they shouldn't do it nobody would go with memories of Viet Nam lingering on I'd go to South America."

While Pat Franzer was not in favor of the reinstatement, he did feel some sort of action should be taken. "I'm not in favor but I think it is necessary. I think we are short-handed and understaffed," he explained.

Twenty year old Beth Waldgren held similar views. "I don't think they should reinstate the system I assume the reason now is in the threat of war."

"I'm opposed to it. Right now I don't think it is necessary," commented Peter Thompson, 18.

Relatively few students agreed with the reinstatement but those that did agree with the proposal held various reasons for doing so.

"I'm in favor of it. The people running the army are ignorant or trying to escape the ghetto. It's the only place for them to go," said Kathy Holman, 20. However, Ms. Holman went on to say, "I wouldn't go. I'd plead insanity."

"Yes, I'd go. I'm too old to learn to speak Russian. I'm an American and when the chips are down you have to be there right or wrong," explained Mike LaVarnay, 21.

Tom Scherlock held similar views. "If I had to go I'd have to give up school and a career but if means having it when it's over, I'll go. They're Russia's missiles from Miami right now, who gives them any love?" he remarked.

While some may not agree with the reinstatement, they did feel that if they were drafted they would fight for the United States.

There is no reason why I wouldn't go. I think I would go because it is expected of me," Thompson explained.

"Smith had different reasons as to why he would fight. "I had 2 brothers in Viet Nam and I couldn't live with myself knowing they're dead and I am living," he noted.

Franzer held yet another view. "A lot depends on the situation as to whether I'd go. If I was fighting for America, sure, but I wouldn't fight for a Nazi," he said.

Although she is out of the drafting age range, Saaja Matka has a son that does fall into the age range. "I don't think I would like it. I'd be decided not to go but it would be his decision. I wouldn't like it because it is the law of our land. We may not always agree with it, but it is law and not going would not change it," she noted.

The rest of the women polled reached similar decisions in the case of a female draft. Most would not go and they would support brothers/husbands decisions to not go.

"I'd get out to a safe place. I'd do anything I could to get them out of it," explained Ms. Holman.

"I hope that I don't get drafted. I would probably go to Canada, I would not want to serve at all and I wouldn't want my brother to go," acknowledged Gail Futuro, 22.

In conclusion, it seems that men would feel more obligated to fight in the case of a war while women would be more willing to take another route in case of a female draft. Carter will send budget proposals to Congress next month so that registration can begin and, if they agree, further mobilization needs met quickly.

Comeaux resigns; Lavanway takes over president's seat

by Peter J. Wickham

Mark J. Comeaux has resigned as president of Student Senate.

In a letter sent Wednesday to the student body and the media, Lavanway lashed out sharply at the senate's and at the student trustee's apparent apathy over this academic year. Comeaux's letter asked for the resignation of senators and the resignation of the student trustee if leadership is not displayed in the future. Vice president Mike LaVarnay will replace Comeaux as president but Comeaux will continue to serve as a senator.

"There seemed to be a lack of confidence generated from me to them, the senator and from them to me," said Comeaux. Comeaux stated that there is an apparent level of apathy in the senate and hopes that his resignation will give the senate moving. Comeaux feels that the senate has some very important issues to deal with in upcoming months such as the 1980-1981 student activities budget. LaVarnay will be officially sworn in as president at the senate's meeting Tuesday at 7:00 p.m. in room A135. LaVarnay said he is pleased that Comeaux will remain on the senate. "I feel Mark still has a lot of good ideas to give the senate," LaVarnay said.

Both Comeaux and LaVarnay said they were dismayed at the student body's apathy. "We don't get much student response at all," said Comeaux. LaVarnay added that the senate is "trying to get organized and get some new things going, but the students aren't coming in with ideas and suggestions."

The student activities office was relatively quiet until Comeaux's resignation student activities director, Jeanne Finkmann said she sees no problems stemming from the resignation. "The senate's constitution is well prepared for a situation like a resignation," Ms. Finkmann said.

Comeaux said he's ready to "give the senate hell" and hopes to get a lot done in his last semester as a senator. Comeaux was one of three senators picked from the club and organization council in the fall and was elected as president of the senate a few weeks later.

Witness being sought

The Public Safety Department is seeking witnesses to a hit and run traffic accident which occurred in Student Parking Lot No. 6 on January 22, between 3:30 a.m. and 4:00 a.m. Anyone who witnessed this accident is requested to contact the Public Safety Office, extension 211 or 230. Any information will be held confidential.

If students are involved in an accident, they should report it immediately to the Public Safety Office. If one hits a parked vehicle which is not occupied, State Law requires an immediate report to the Public Safety Office and a reasonable attempt to notify the owner of the vehicle. Anyone who fails to report, leaving an unattended vehicle can be charged with leaving the scene of an accident. This could result in suspension of a driver's license.

Bone, Barch both file for reelection

Jan Bone and Brian Barch are both running for seats on the Harper Board of Trustees. Mrs. Bone will be running under her legal name of Janet W. Bone. She wants to run for reelection because she feels that she can do a good job. Mrs. Bone also feels that her experience could help balance the inexperience of any new board members who may get elected.

As a majority of the seats are up for election, Mrs. Bone feels this is significant. She also says she enjoys the chance to be on the board.

Mrs. Bone feels that the choosing of Mr. McGrath as president has been a major accomplishment for the board since she has begun serving on it. She feels that the board has gotten a tighter grip on financial matters since she joined the board. She emphasizes that the board works as a team. Mrs. Bone's personal accomplishments has been that she has tried to do her homework before and between meetings.

Mrs. Bone, if elected, believes the board should be as reasonable about spending money as possible. Mrs. Bone expects Willow Park center classes to be shut down. She says that the board is looking at ways in which it can conserve energy.

Brian Barch is running for a seat on the board because he says the school board is "an area of interest. I have had I'd like to pursue." Barch has only been on the board since last July. Since then, he has worked to get internal financial reporting to the board to do a better job of getting hold of finances.

Barch feels that decisions about where the school's finances should go need to be answered. He feels that the board should develop new programs instead of just trying to keep up at its present pace. Barch says that new courses should be added and that the facility should be kept current. Barch is running for a full three year term, but may have to run for a one-year term. If elected, then Barch wants to set up a strategy for the development of the college.

Barch's plan to develop new programs and to get the college money is a complicated one.

Barch says that charge bars will get the college the money it needs.

If a student can't get the class he wants at a college, and must go to an out-district college to take that course, then the first college has to pay the second college a set amount of money. Barch says that Harper isn't pulling in much money in this way. He says that if Harper developed new programs which other area colleges don't have, then Harper's income would increase. He says that this would make up for a decline in enrollment that is predicted.

David Tombeck and Joan Alusman, both up for reelection, couldn't be reached for comment.

Editorial Cable television opens 'Pandora's Box' for Harper

Most people think of unedited versions of current films, live broadcasts of various sporting events from around the country or even the simple pleasure of being able to watch a program without commercial interruptions. But to Harper College and the surrounding communities it can mean much more.

Through cable stations set aside for public broadcast, college credit courses can be offered in homes subscribing to the cable system. Eventually, homebound students will be able to keep up with work in classes while at the same time members of the community can brush up on their skills.

Information about the college and various programs offered here could be promoted over the cable system. Of course, programming potential depends on the amount of cable time available.

Lecture series and workshops could also be broadcast. A program such as the self protection and crime prevention lecture given on campus last Friday could benefit the entire community. Literally thousands of people in the surrounding area could use the information offered but relatively few even knew of the program. Cable programming would enable the taxpayers that support the college more insight into exactly where their money goes while at the same time information applicable to everyday life could be obtained.

Eventually sporting events could be broadcast throughout the area. While Harper students certainly do not throng to Bidg. M or fight for seats to witness a game, community homes may opt to watch the Hawks rather than a nationally broadcast program. This, in turn, could spark community interest in the Harper sports program and conceivably boost attendance figures.

Of course, all of this can not take place with the wave of a hand. Once an agreement is reached between the cable companies and the municipalities, it takes approximately six months for the cable system to be installed let alone setting up cable classes, gaining programming time for lectures/workshop series or even broadcasting a basketball game.

However, cable TV is a bright spot in Harper's future and should definitely be brought into fuller focus.

Sexual revolution causes problems

(P.S. The sexual revolution may be here, but it apparently has not come for the revolutionists.)

Dr. Gary Margolis, a member at Middlebury College in Vermont, says health professionals on college campuses are now spending upwards of two-thirds of their time dealing with students who have sex related emotional problems.

Margolis, according to Zodiac News Service, claims that the stress of sexual intimacy on campus leaves some students severely ridden and depressed and even can be the cause of suicides, stomachaches, and

Singer's arrest shows apathy

It would seem to me that Paul McCartney's recent publicized entry into Japan can only be regarded as a measure of his contempt, or at very least, apathy towards his occupation as well as his audience. If an international celebrity transmits such a sizable amount of poorly conceived contraband into a strictly regulated country, it only emphasizes the indifference he must feel towards his professional commitments. Paul McCartney is no exception.

But the issue here is not so much the performer himself as it is the multitude of fans who held tickets in the concert, previous to his arrest. After waiting over a decade for the former Beatle to return, shouldn't they feel just a bit betrayed that their bid to prosecution and consequently the cancellation of the Japanese tour? If McCartney was so determined to bring the marijuana into Japan, one would think he could have found a better place to hide it, rather than stuffing it into his personal luggage. Or is it simply that he has become so obsessed with his own image that he believed himself to be immune to petty custom laws?

Still, despite the initial compromise, Paul may be surprised not too greatly if McCartney gets off with a minimal fine at best, and is all home safe and sound by the time this goes to print. Either way, the losses remain the same: 10,000 Japanese fans who have waited in vain for the return of a legend!

Letters to the Editor

Comeaux gives up seat

I have seen fit to resign as President of the Student Senate. I do this with deep regret and hope that the new president, Mike LaVanya, can do a good job.

I must apologize to the students of Harper College for the lack of representative and leadership the Student Senate and Student Trustee have shown. If I thought things could be changed for the good of the student body this resignation would never have been written.

I hope my resignation will get the student government moving toward the kind of leadership they are responsible for. If not, the students should call for the resignations of the Student Senate and Student Trustee, with the exception of a small few who give their very best at all times.

Respectfully,

Mark J. Comeaux

Enrollment on upswing

by MIKE BAMBACH
Initial enrollment figures for the spring semester have been released and, at the close of last Monday, 13,547 students were enrolled at Harper.

Dr. John Lucas, director of planning and research, projected that the end of registration (EJR, or the last day a student can add a course) figures would reach 13,800. This would be an increase of 1,339 over the spring semester of 1979.

It comes after a Harper all-time high EJR credit load count of 16,828 during the 1979 fall semester. And, including non-credit students, 20,152 students attended Harper last semester, marking the first time Harper's student population reached the 20,000 mark. Broken down, the fall EJR count shows a 3 to 1 ratio of part-time students to full-time students or 12,274 to 4,808. Currently, there are 10,000 part-time and 3,541 full-time students enrolled at Harper.

Fred Valeril, director of placement and career, gave credit for the spring enrollment increase to Harper exhibits at the Randhurst and Woodfield Malls.

"We concentrated on Woodfield and Randhurst, and thought it was excellent. We handed out 600 to 700 applications in just two days."

Steve Callin, student development, added, "The area papers had as much an effect on the enrollment drive as anything."

Concerning enrollment dips from fall to spring, Dr. Lucas pointed out that such dips are "traditional."

"People generally start in the fall," said Lucas, "and you don't pick up too many new students in the spring. It's a more or less, less to gain sort of deal."

Admissions has been busy this semester. (photo by Tony Flores)

Part-timers, enrollment rise

by MIKE BAMBACH
First of four part-timers

Part-time teachers are on the rise at Harper.

In the 1975-76 school year, 178 full-time teachers were employed at Harper.

That number peaked to 322 full-timers in the 1976-77 school year and has since dipped to 181, the present number of full-time teachers at Harper.

In comparison, Harper employed 321 part-time teachers during the fall 1975 semester and 266 part-timers in the spring 1976 semester.

The number of part-time teachers has since been steadily increasing, although dipping slightly to 266 part-timers in the fall of 1976 and 268 part-time teachers in the spring of 1977. The number of part-timers had increased to one for the fall 1979 semester and, currently, there are 276 for this, the spring, 1980 semester.

Dr. David Williams, vice-president of academic affairs, points out that, "As our enrollment goes up, so does our use of part-time teachers."

Enrollment figures for the fall '79 semester support Williams' statement as 20,152 total students were apportioned among the aforementioned 286 part-time teachers. Both figures are school highs.

However, a logical question arises: Why part-time teachers?

The Harbinger examines that next week.

Schools face frog crisis

CHICAGO, IL (UPI)—A declining supply of frogs will cause "harm" researchers and biology students working exclusively on fetal pigs, according to University of Chicago assistant professor Richard Wassersug.

Wassersug says pollution, construction, and human encroachment are causing the shortage of frogs, which biologists favor for research for a number of reasons.

Wassersug estimates "millions of frogs are cut up in American schools each year for elemental biology lessons, and that hundreds of thousands of others are used in biomedical research.

But some frog suppliers, like the University of Michigan Amphibian Facility, are finding fewer frogs in breeding grounds.

As a result, many educational programs are resorting to using fetal pigs in their biology and anatomy classes instead of frogs, Wassersug reports.

tickets cost registration

AUSTIN, TX (UPI)—A charge that the university is improperly "acting like a court" in barring him from registration because he hadn't paid his campus parking tickets, University of Texas junior Mark Spangler lost the first round of his battle to register for spring semester when a city court refused to hear his case last week.

Spangler owes $250 in tickets, but claims he was not notified of this obligation within the required ten days. "I am not contesting the tickets," he says. "I am protesting because the university denied me my 14th Amendment right to take the tickets to court.

He says he'll take the case to the U.S. Supreme Court, if necessary.

A magazine devoted to the literary and visual arts, entitled "Point of View," which was temporarily dropped from the school budget, has been revived. Gill Terry and Bill Finat are the year's advisors from the Liberal and Fine Arts divisions. Terry, originally became the advisor approximately in years ago and was followed by the Betty Hull Hall left the position because of personal reasons. The publication is backed by the student activities fund. Budgeting for the magazine amounts to one and one-half percent of the total fund. Harper students Debbie Wurster and Kris Pappenberg are this year's editors. Anyone interested in submitting material such as poems and short stories will have to meet a Feb. 8 deadline. Students are urged to sign a release form indicating that their material is totally his or her own work and does not infringe on any existing copyright. Students will choose which items are to be published and rejected. Both the faculty and the students have an say for the best writings. "There has been a lot of outstanding work done for this magazine," said Hall. She said influenced most of the students to submit their writings to different publications. "Some writings are accepted but many are rejected, it just depends on the taste, and needs of the publisher," said Hall. Former Harper student Sylvia J. Hookman had articles appear in a popular women's magazine and also a magazine material published in a golf magazine. Material by other students have been used for various reasons.

Iran-U.S. Marriage

SPD) Recent attempts by the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) to track down and deport "out-of-state" Iranian national students in this country have apparently sparked an upsurge in Iranian marriages to Americans.

Ali Parvaneh and Jeanne Self, both University of Florida students, were married Nov. 28. Not coincidentally Parvaneh, an year the next day for a deportation hearing in Jacksonville.

Under immigration law any foreign national who marries an American citizen is eligible for permanent visa.

While Parvaneh had been required to hold since March has fears of deportation "pushed" the newlyweds plans forward. INS prosecutors attempted to deport Parvaneh when it was discovered that he had not been a U.F. student since spring quarter. Parvaneh claimed that the U.F. registration office had made a mistake in the records, and that he had actually been attending classes throughout the semester in New York City. First Deputy Clerk Herbert Brown claims: "They're marrying like crazy in fact. In fact, we've married 13 in the last year."

But Mary Thompson, recently retired director of the International Student Service in New York, says she doesn't believe it. She thinks that Americans are just taking note of the Iranian reforms more than they did before the crisis in Iran erupted.

The INS is keeping a close eye on the Iranians' activities, however, just in case. John Daniel, acting district director for the INS, says, "We don't want people to marry just to stay here."

Court Makes Bar Exam Easy

PHOENIX AZ (CPS) The Arizona Supreme Court, upset that four out of every ten law students flunked the state bar exam given last July, has thrown out a section of the test that most students did badly on. The failure rate consequently has fallen below 50 per cent.

The part of the test that was abandoned was a multiple choice section called the "multistate." As the name suggests, the multistate is used by a number of state bar associations. In December, Arizona Supreme Court Chief Justice James Luke Cameron ruled that the passing standard of 67 on the multistate had been "too high," and eliminated the multistate section from the formula used to determine students' performance on the entire bar exam.

Cameron's action allowed another 30 students to pass the bar.

Some memories can't wait

Last night as I was driving home from work, I turned on my car radio and heard "Mrs. Brown, you've got a lovely daughter, girls as sharp as her are something rare. But it's so sad, she doesn't love me."
"You remember that oldie by Hermann's Hermits, "Mrs. Brown You've Got A Lovely Daughter." And following that classic came "Imagine me and you, I do, I think about you day and night, it's only right, to think about the girl you love and hold her tight, so happy together."

Suddenly I remembered where I first heard that song, on my back porch looking into the summer sky. I also remember my mom buying the single for me at Westworth for 49 cents, a boy at my dad's party. I can still remember "listening" in my bedroom with my cheap official genuine Discworld stylus phonograph, which by the way wore down the record with every play, singing to a cast of imaginary thousands. Can you remember the first time you heard, "Happy Together?"

Moods for Moderns

by MIKE HINKLE

So many songs are regarded as classics, but I like to reserve my own personal list of classics as songs that I have played numerous times. When I hear my classics I get goose-pimples all over, just from all those terrific memories.

How many times have you and your friends heard a certain song and asked, "Do you remember when that song came out?" Whenever I hear, "I Want to Hold Your Hand" or "She Loves You," I can think of the Ed Sullivan Show or the Shea Stadium concert. And with my eyes closed real tight, I can see myself as a little tyke with my eyes glued to the tube and my heroes singing to the throngs of young, gah-gah females.

Thinking back to the days of the summer when I was a kid, how exhausted I would be today if I lived that tumultuous life I did when I was a kid. I remember putting my transistor radio underneath my pillow just to listen to my favorite top 40 tunes. I can still hear the muffled sound of Otis Redding's "Sitting On The Dock of the Bay" or even the Beatles' "Lady Madonna." Looking back now it is strange how scared I was, the fear of being caught by my parents and the inevitable penalty of no more radio!

I am tuning in my radio right now, searching for my old favorite station Super (FM). But, alas they no longer exist as a top 40 format, but as a new talk station. To keep in tune with the youth of today, I thought I would tune into the present top 40 station WIS. That was the station that had forced my favorite super (FM) into changing its format. No, they have not changed, they will play the top 40. I suppose all the kids still listen to that format. I am beginning to realize now that things do not change with time, only the names do. My younger brothers asked me if I knew the new song by the Beatles, "Dirty Water." I gaped, "That's not new, it was first done by the Standells." I let that sink in his cerebrum and then said, "Did you know that Dick Dade, the guitar player of the Standells, was one of the original Disney Mouseketeers?"

My brother sighed, "Who cares anyway, I'm sorry I asked you a little question!" I was surprised little, as a matter of fact, I expected that answer from him anyway.

Now, I only get a chance to listen to top 40 radio when I am on a holiday. This past holiday I tuned in on the local top 40 and heard the Beatles' "And I Love Her" and I was replete with joy from fond memories. My younger brothers looked at me like I was some kind of a leech who'd sang like Phony Sid on the movie, "Hard Days Night." I knew all the chord changes, all of the lyrics and I remembered when I first heard it. But I could not take the constant interruptions of my twin-brothers by songs like "March, March, March," "In the Navy" and "I Will Survive."

Hopefully though, moods for moderns of the new wave pop music which is bubbling underneath the mainstream right now will catch on and top 40 radio will be playing songs like the "old days." Some of the ones that I hope will catch on include the Pretenders, "Brass in Pocket," Pearl Harbor and the Explosions "Drive-In," The Undertones "Jump Boys," Off Broadway "Full Moon," or the Specials "Do the Dog."

But, it's funny because classics seem to be liked by other generations as well. After all a classic is a classic, right? Do you remember the Crewcuts "Shh, Boom"*****

This guy's not the 'marrying kind'

"Dear Juli: I am a male student at Harper, and I would like to know what field of occupation I am best suited for. I would also like to know what the girl I marry will be like."

In this chart is represented a person with a lot of versatility and the potential for developing many skills. You seem to be the type of person that needs a lot of "follow thru," not only in your backing them up, representing them, or fighting for their cause.

You could do fairly well in areas such as athletics, being a field representative, banking, real estate sales, or the artistic professions. But, you would excel in the fields of crime enforcement, police work, investigation, the military, firefighting, paramedics, being a union leader, a political activist, a stunt man, even a criminal, etc.

complementary pair, and for you, the sign is Pisces. The other water signs, Cancer and Scorpio would suit you just as well. While you might find yourself attracted to the fiery types (Aries, Leo, Sag.), this choice could lead into a competitive relationship, and is not a good basis for something permanent.

You must remember, that the Sun sign isn't always the strongest, and you may be feelings of others, even though your thoughts seem to be influenced by your individual responses to them. You will have to put a little extra effort into a relationship to keep it harmonious. Don't expect it to happen by itself. Don't be too impulsive, or forceful with yourself. You can scare some nice people away.

Presently you may be feeling the "itch" to move. Uranus, the planet of sudden change is just entering the 4th house which symbolizes your home. The time may be ripe to break away and assert your individuality. Watch for opportunities that may be headed your way. With effort, persistence, and with help from others, which is how you learn the best, I'm sure you will find success and happiness. Good Luck!

professional life, but in your emotional and social involvements as well. You need an environment that grants you freedom and lots of variety.

There seems to be a natural streak of restlessness and impatience within you, that you might find frustrating, if you let yourself get involved in static, unchanging situations.

Your strongest talent seems to be that of courage, thriving in situations which face you with challenge, risk or danger. To put it plainly, you are the kind of person that needs some excitement in your life from without. Otherwise, it might come from within in such forms as temper-lost, outbursts of over aggression. This, is the first emphasis in your chart.

The second, is your natural ability for working in cooperation with groups of people or organizations

As to what kind of girl you will marry, I can't predict the outcome. I also have to mention that you aren't exactly the "marrying type," being very aloof and freedom bound. But, I can clue you in to the type that would suit you best!

Astrologically, the seventh house is the indicator of a person, similar qualities. Keep in mind for your match to be emotional, adaptable, and a level-headed person. Make sure that you can relate on an intellectual level also, for this seems almost more necessary for you than most.

At times, you may be somewhat insensitive to the

College Fakes Grades

By STEVE PALMER

OXNARD, CA (CBS) — Oxnard College doesn't look like much situated on a few treeless acres 40 miles north of Los Angeles, the 5000-student campus quietly serves a local community preoccupied with the orange and housing industries.

Until recently its primary diversion was provided by a 22-year-old basketball player named Craig Gilbert, who last year led the Inland team to an impressive 28-5 season and a berth in the state small-college basketball tourney. Gilbert's performance was exciting enough to draw the attention of even University of New Mexico basketball recruiter Manny Goldstein. Indeed, Goldstein successfully convinced Gilbert to transfer to New Mexico for the 79-80 season. But the recruitment, and a fluke discovery by police officials, started what is probably the worst college sports scandal since the early 1970s.

The scandal revolves around allegations that sports programs at New Mexico, Arizona State, San Jose State, Oregon, Oregon State and Utah in a number of other schools are also under investigation; falsified the academic records of some of its athletes to help them meet NCAA eligibility requirements.

The allegations have raised a number of serious questions about the lengths to which some universities will go to assemble winning teams.

All the questions were raised almost by mistake last March when the New Mexico Organized Crime Strike Force, investigating illegal gambling operations, tapped a phone conversation between Goldstein and New Mexico head coach Norman Ellenberger that implicated both in a reported scheme to fix Craig Gilbert's college transcripts and make him eligible to play for the Lobos this season.

Goldstein, according to law enforcement charges, had an Albuquerque printer manufacture an official seal of 72nd-sident Mercer County Community College in Trenton, N.J. Goldstein allegedly used the seal to make bogus Mercer credits appear legitimate, and then, according to prosecutors, arranged to have these fake credits mixed in with Gilbert's Inland credits. Investigators subsequently charged that Goldstein conspired with Inland trainer Robert Maruca to pay Oxnard of Admissions Dr. John Woody $200 to mix in the fake Mercer credits with Gilbert's real Inland credits, and thus make the player eligible to transfer in and play for New Mexico.

And on Nov. 23, FBI agents in Los Angeles intercepted a forged Mercer transcript that had been mailed special delivery from New Jersey. That is when the scandal began to unravel.

The Albuquerque investigation, following a trail of small college and extension service credits, soon spread to cast doubt on the academic records of athletes at Oregon State, the University of Oregon, and the University of Utah. In some cases, athletes had gotten academic credit without ever attending class. In some others, the athletes hadn't even been enrolled in the classes.

Rock Richmond and Mike Honeycutt of Oregon received credit from extension courses offered by Rocky Mountain College of Billings, MT, and Utah's (RSU) University. Neither player had ever attended class. When Oregon State found that football player Larry Edwards had also received credit from Utah, it checked further to find a bogus grade from a Florida junior college. And though University of Utah basketball player Danny Vranes was originally cleared of charges that his out-of-state credit was improper, he was subsequently ruled ineligible to play, and Utah had to forfeit five basketball games this season. Similar instances of academically ineligible students playing have caused Arizona State and San Jose State to forfeit games as well. Goldstein and Ellenberger, meanwhile, have been forced to resign, and face criminal charges of phone and mail fraud. Otherwise, the players are the ones paying most of the price of the scandal so far: Gilbert, who couldn't meet NCAA transfer requirements of at least 80 percent average in his last 60-point average, is only one of about a dozen basketball players who can't perform this year.

City College Athletic Director Bob Dinsberg remembers Gilbert as not much of a student, but "A ball of a ball player." In fact, at the end of his first City College season, Gilbert found himself short of credits, and was ruled ineligible for the next season.

He'd repaired his grades by the 1976-77 season, which he spent at Oxnard, a team that usually gets a little more press. It was after an Oxnard, A.

Trade Tech game that Gilbert was first approached by Manny Goldstein.

"I came to take a ride. But rumors of over-aggressive recruiting at New Mexico made Gilbert wary. Some friends told me it was like Las Vegas," referring to the University of Nevada-Las Vegas basketball program, which has been repeatedly scrutinized and barred from championship play for high-pressure recruiting practices. "They said it wouldn't be long before they (New Mexico) were caught. But I decided to take the ride with this guy, and I saw the crowd at the Palms (UNLV arena), and decided this is the place."

Gilbert's story is not atypical of young men who are put in these institutions who don't belong there. It claims George Killian, executive director of the National Junior College Athletic Association (NJCAA).

But big colleges court small college players for several good reasons.

Carson DiPaolo, football coach at Santa Barbara City College, explains, "The advantage that the junior college player represents is that the recruiters are looking for players to fill particular needs. The junior college players have had two years to improve. They're more of a known quantity than players just out of high school."

And some of the small colleges actively push transfers. DiPaolo regularly prepares and distributes athletic resumes for his more talented players.

"Yet sometimes the universities are kidding themselves if they think they can take these kids out of the junior colleges and expect them to perform academically," the NJCAA's Killian contends. "At the university a kid plays his first two years, and leaves without any degree."

But players aren't the only victims. "I'm finished," sighs Bob Maruca, the Oxnard trainer through whom Goldstein allegedly tried to fix Gilbert's transcript. Sitting in the converted trailer that houses Inland's athletic department, he swears, "It's ridiculous. All I do here is coach soccer and train the kids." He picks up a soccer ball, and tugs it. "Now I won't find a job anywhere."

Asked why schools would condone such shady practices, Maruca silently takes a slip of paper and writes one word on it: Boosters.

"You're a pawn, I'm a pawn," he explains. "We're all pawns. If you don't have money, you're a pawn."

Season never started

Swim teams go down the drain

by WAYNE REYNOLDS

It's been a disappointing fall and winter so far for Steve Eul, head coach of the men's and women's swim teams.

"Sure it's frustrating," he said about the cancellation of the swimming season for 1979-80. "But what are you going to do, problems arise when you're dealing with new equipment and you have to learn to deal with it."

In fact, the problems with fixing leaks in the swimming pool, cracks in the racquetball courts, and various other structural problems, has forced athletic teams, and in fact the community itself, to postpone the use of these facilities.

"I'm sure that the public is disappointed with the delays also," Eul acknowledged. "So the sooner they're fixed, the better."

Eul, who taught at North Park College before getting the job as swim coach at Harper, said that he has had a lot of swimmers, both male and female as a result of the cancellation of the season.

"Some of them were top swimmers in high school," he said. "But unless they change their minds between now and next year, it looks as though they won't return."

The team will not begin practicing until February, and even then they will have to conduct "Swim Clinics," because college rules dictate that a full sports team cannot begin practice officially until November. But Eul noted that swimmers "will swim on their own anyway. Swimming is thought in to be a team sport, but actually it's more of an individual thing."

Eul does plan, when practice begins next year, to include water polo and water volleyball, along with other water activities aside from swimming, into the swimming program for his swimmers.

"The reason for this is quite logical," Eul pointed out. "You can't just swim and swim and swim. By playing little games, it relaxes the swimmers, and I feel it helps them forget about the workload for awhile and just have some fun."

In the end, the swimmers will hopefully relax in the pool of concentrating much better when the workouts and meets become tougher.

Until the season begins, Eul will have to be content to arrange intramural athletic programs, along with doing some community relations work for the athletic department.

Eul plans to begin looking for top area prospects soon, and hopes that it will take two or three years before the swimming team will become competitive on a level with other area colleges.

"But," Eul emphasizes, depending on the latest we can say, we could be tough in a much shorter period of time."

An empty swimming pool means no practice for Harper's men's and women's swim teams. The teams were scheduled to start practice in November.

Basketball slips by Wright

by JOE KUSK

The handful of spectators that happened to wander in and catch Harper's basketball game, had a hard time distinguishing between the team that was 16-8 and the team that was 1-7. Playing like it was 3 to 2 in a contest of 3:30 p.m., the Harper men's team woke up in time to stop the visiting Wright Hawks, 41-54 the past Thursday afternoon.

The Hawks will next take on DuPage, Tuesday at home at 7:30 p.m., after the winner's game. The men then will battle Rock Valley at home Thursday, again at 7:30 p.m. The DuPage game will be broadcast on WMM-FM 52.7, the first time ever a Harper game is on the air.

"We didn't play well at all, we were very lethargic. We didn't play with the intensity we hoped for," said new coach Roger Beechold who was happy to see his team just scrape with the win. "We were getting easy shots off of their size, but they started shooting full-court and then we weren't ready for the rebound. We had three easy shots, but they weren't going down and that kept Wright in the game."

The Hawks shot a dismal 37 percent from the floor, after only managing to drop 28 percent of their shots in the first half. This was the third game in a row that Harper has been plagued by cold shooting. The Hawks did even score, hitting only 26 percent of their field goal attempts for the first half. Harper actually found itself down by eight points, 22-18 with seven minutes left in the first half until Chris Plank hit a 20-footer. Brad Miller added a tip-in and Steve Lebeck pumped in four points. His last bucket, a lay-up after stripping a Wright player of the ball, knotted the score up at 22-22.

The Hawks finally took the lead on two free throws by Mike Bajless and then got two more points from free throws by Craig Hawkins, to give Harper a 28-23 edge going into the locker room.

Harper finally got its offense in gear somewhat, jumping out to a 30-20 lead in the second half. The Hawks got buckets by Tom Longati, Rob Dorsey and Hawkins to increase the margin and just hold on long enough to win.

"I'm glad we got this win. It's a long season and I hope we can pick ourselves up. We have to get ourselves going," said Beechold. "We don't have all the size or quickness in the world and if we don't play with in-tenity every game we'll be in trouble."

Wright controlled the boards, limiting the Hawks to only one shot each time down court, the Hawks holding a 35-28 rebounding edge.

The Hawks got double figure scoring from Hawkins and Dorsey with 14 and 18 points respectively. Plank had nine points for the Hawks and Jeff Martinicki added eight.

Logosz, who had been averaging over 20 points a game for Harper only had six on this time out, but he contributed on defense with five steals.

The Hawks' Dale Strawn scores on a fast-break layup in Harper's 41-54 win over Wright College. The Hawks take on DuPage, Tuesday at home at 7:30 p.m. The women's team will play DuPage at 7 p.m. Both games are free to Harper students and staff. (photo by Lori Lynn Gay)

Senate proposes seven amendments

by MIKE BAMBACH

The Student Senate proposed seven amendments to the Senate constitution, elected a new vice-president, and responded to the resignation of former Senate president Mark Comaux last Tuesday.

New Student Senate president Mike LaVamoy proposed that the Senate be reorganized from its present 11 member council to 18 members. The proposal would include a part-time student representative to the Senate, who could be elected in no more than 12 credit hours. A proposal that would require at least 10 per cent of the student body to pass an amendment to the Senate Constitution was temporarily put on ice. Senate member Dale Markay objected to the idea, reasoning that any amendment to the Constitution should receive consent from at least 20-25 per cent of the Harper student body.

The Senate decided to allocate $1,200 to the Special Projects Fund in order to recover pool tables and purchase new pool cues for next year. LaVamoy explained the Senate's decision to cancel Student Activities, which normally deals with such expenditures.

"They are normally in the black," said LaVamoy, however, they are in the red this semester and the Senate decided we should handle the absence of money as a gesture to Student Activities."

LaVamoy also proposed that all senatorial elections be held in fall. The current Senate elections are held twice a year, once in the spring, to elect half of the Senate, and once in fall, in which the remaining members of the Senate are chosen.

All Senators agreed that student officers be reelected in a minimum of 12 credit hours. This requirement, however, was waived in the election of Lena Elias to the Senate vice-presidency.

"I'm very excited," said Elias of her unanimous selection, and "I'm full of confidence that we'll have many changes for the student body."

Before adjournment, both LaVamoy and Student Trustee Bruce Zanes replied to former President Comaux's letter of resignation. Comaux in a letter to the Harbinger announced his resignation last Monday, lashed out at the Student Senate, requesting the student body to "call for the resignations of the Student Senate and Student Trustee with the exception of a few who give their best at all times."

Zanes rebuked, "I haven't made a comment about Comaux's letter to the student body and don't plan to. I feel I have done my utmost in keeping my ear open to what Harper students want. If I think I have done my best."

Said LaVamoy, "Mark's letter is stimulating, we need to get our butts in gear."

Trustee Klussman ponders her bid for re-election

by MARK TURGINEN

Because of personal problems, Harper Trustee Juan Klussman is not certain whether or not she shall run for re-election in April for the board of trustees. Mrs. Klussman said she will make up her mind in March.

While on the board, Mrs. Klussman said that she investigated the need for change in the administration of the college, which resulted in the resignation of former President Robert Lahl. She also said that she was the chairman of the presidential search committee.

Mrs. Klussman said she also appointed a financial committee for more complete fiscal form of financial reporting to the board.

Mrs. Klussman, who is currently president of the board of trustees, said that she and other board members were responsible for the appointing of an educational consultant in stead of an architect for the planning of new buildings. Mrs. Klussman indicated that with declining high school enrollment, some board members felt it better to hire the educational consultant because he would keep an eye on such things whereas an architect wouldn't.

Mrs. Klussman said that she wanted more concise and meaningful financial reports and went to Harper's accounts. She then appointed a financial committee to give her the kind of reports she wanted.

Four of the seven members on the board of trustees will be up for election in April. Trustees

Janet Bone and Brian Barch have said they are running for another term on the board. Trustee David Tomchek could not be reached for comment on whether he will seek a second term.

Board elections will be held April 12. Three 3-year terms and one 1-year term will be up for election. Petitions for those interested in running for the board are available in the office of James D. Perry, vice-president of administrative services. Petitions for candidacy may be filed between Feb. 27 and March 11.

Candidates must be 18 years of age and be citizens of the United States. They must have resided in the state and college district for at least 30 days prior to the election.

Registration begins

Harper College will be participating in a county-wide voter registration campaign until Feb. 14. The college will serve as a temporary location of registration during this period. Laurie Wren, secretary in the Administrative Services Office, has been deputized as a temporary registrar. She is authorized to receive registration from any eligible suburban Cook County resident.

To register, a person must be a United States citizen, 18 years of age, and must be a resident of a suburban Cook County election precinct. Naturalized citizens must bring naturalization papers to the registration office.

Citizens may register at the Administrative Services Office, 8866 Addison from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, through Feb. 14. Harper College district voters who register during this period will be eligible to vote in the April 12 elections to select four Harper College trustees.

New tenure law in effect

by PETER J. MCKLUND

For the first time in history, faculty members at Harper and all Illinois community colleges are now covered by an official tenure law enacted by the state legislature.

The new law, which went into effect Jan. 1, enables teachers to receive tenure after three years of service. Previously, the issue of tenure was a matter that each Illinois community college handled personally, with no intervention from the state at all. Harper faculty members have been tenured since five years service.

The new tenure law was passed in the last legislative session after much controversy including a veto by Governor Thompson which the legislature overrode. The law will increase the number of tenured faculty at Harper from 100 people to 177, or from 71 per cent to 80 per cent of the faculty. According to William Miller, president of the faculty union chapter at Harper, most staff members at Harper in the law are pleased with its introduction.

The Board of Trustees will take an official look at the new law at their next meeting, Feb. 14. However, Juan Klussman, president of the board, said that the board will abide by the law.

The new tenure law also excludes clauses on the procedures for firing and layoffs of all employees tenured or not.

As far as the bargaining agreement that the Harper faculty has with the board of trustees, Miller said he was "unclear at this point" as what changes in the agreement would come about as a result of the new law. Miller said the law may affect clauses on tenure and reduction of force.

The law does affect all Illinois community colleges and so far only one college has spoken out against the law. John Wood College has filed a suit against the law on what college spokes as technical ambiguities in the law.

Women begin to shake under draft pressure

In case anyone hasn't noticed, talk around campus has switched from "what are you doing this weekend?" to "what will you do if the draft comes back?"

This switch was sparked by President Carter's recent announcement of sending a proposal to Congress calling for the reinstatement of the Selective Service Program. This would call for all males between the ages of 18 and 26 to register for the draft. A presidential decision concerning the status of women in the program is expected within the next week.

Many women argue that "I could never kill anyone". But how many of those women stop to consider the fact that many men hold the same belief? No one really wants to go to war and kill others; no one wants to be drafted or have family drafted; most feel an obligation to defend their country and to uphold the liberty of the land.

Ultimately, no one should have to be drafted, let alone serve in any war. But with women currently pushing for the ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment, they will have to accept so-called good and bad of the overall situation.

According to a column by Richard Cohen, (which appeared in the Jan. 31 issue of the Daily Herald), women volunteers are allowed to perform in almost every military job except combat.

The reason? The law bars women from actual combat. However, the army appears to have no qualms about enlisting the aid of women. Of the 322 positions offered by the military only 26 are restricted to men.

By enlisting, women would not only be serving their country, they would also be able to pick up benefits formerly reserved for males. Veteran privileges would be gained in addition to educational benefits.

There seems to be only one thing that both sexes agree on in this whole heated debate. Fear. The fear of dying, the fear of our country going to war and, the fear of another Viet Nam.

Most feel that a reinstatement surely means a war is soon to come. Should a war break out, we must be prepared to defend our interests and without the draft system it is unlikely that enough people would enlist to properly defend the country.

And, whether male or female, behind enemy lines or behind a typewriter defending our country and protecting our interests should be our only concern at this and any other time.

Group billing vandalism solution

COLLEGE PARK, MD (CPS) - College housing officials from around the country say dormitory vandalism is one of their most persistent and expensive problems. To lower costs, increasing numbers of schools have resorted to charging all dorm residents for repairs. A University of Maryland student, though, has taken the university to court to avoid paying his $27.15 share of dorm damages inflicted during 1979-79.

Wayne Willoughby was charged $27.15 last April for his "share" of the $1300 in vandalism damages caused to his section of Chestertown Hall, a Maryland dorm. In September, Willoughby swore that, "Hell will freeze over before I pay this bill."

Willoughby paid the bill, however, so he could register for classes.

"Then he took the university to small claims court on Dec. 3 to regain his $27.15 in his legal statement, he said, "I did not bear legal responsibility for the

War: a big business like any corporate enterprise

Some day "they" will have a war and nobody will come. Only travels convince me that the people of the world want peace, especially that an all out war almost certainly entails the obliteration of human life. As someone has said, "the living would envy the dead." Seen in the context of history, war is a business like any other great corporate enterprise, only more profitable than most. Tragically, our economic system appears to need the infusion of uncontrolled military spending about every 25 years, and if a war is not

"handy" we are not above creating one. Given an increase in urban crime, one response is to double the police force. A more rational policy is to deal directly with the cause of crime, exploitation, broken promises, disparities of wealth and opportunity, the planning morality of our civic and national leaders. The same is true, I think at the international level. Tragically, we simulate democracy at home while supporting fascist governments all over the world. How else could so percent of the world family command 26 percent of the world's energy and resources, an enclave of wealth in a sea of poverty?

While each person must wrestle with the issue of militarism and the draft, I'd be inclined to take issue with K.H. who, in the January 28 issue of the Harbinger, indicated that she would not go "pleading insanity" if I were of draft age. I fear one would not go "pleading sanity."

Thanks to 'key' people in loss

I want to publicly thank the ten young people who found my jeep keys between C and D buildings on Jan. 28. Thank God, they found them and that our paths happened to cross when I was starting to feel panic at the loss of the keys. As a result, time lost was minimal in relation to what could have occurred had the keys been picked up by other than these three wonderful people.

Thank you both again!

Why? Because they're 'cheaper'

by MIKE BAMBACH
second of a four-part series

Enrollment figures for the fall 1979 semester rose to 20,152 total students — a Harper all-time high. Not coincidentally, the number of part-time teachers rose to 66 — also a Harper high.

Meanwhile, the number of full-time teachers at Harper dropped to 221 — the lowest number of full-timers since the 1975-76 school year.

But why have the number of full-timers decreased while enrollment and the number of part-time teachers have increased?

"Because," says Faculty Senate President William Miller, "part-timers are cheaper."

Miller explains, "Full-timers are all covered by contract, and most of their benefits are included in contract."

And although part-timers and full-timers receive the same overload pay scales, part-timers aren't covered by contract, therefore they don't receive the tenure, insurance, pension, or other benefits full-timers do. Hence, part-time teachers are cheaper.

This is what makes part-time teachers most advantageous — economic feasibility. "You don't have to release them," explains Dr. David Williams, vice-president of academic affairs,

"you just don't hire them. We have to keep a certain balance between full and part-time teachers."

That balance is a 60-40 ratio of full-timers to part-timers — "it's a guideline," said Williams, "in terms of instructional cost. Historically, 60-40 is where we've been as far as balance is concerned."

Ironically, it was severe economic strains that led to reduction in force measures during the spring of 1979. The Harper Board of Trustees was forced to lay off 14 full-time positions and three programs in order to save $700,000 for the 1979-80 budget. This, in turn, opened the door for an influx of part-timers. Now another question arises: Why not employ an entire faculty made up of part-timers?

"Teaching is not the primary vocation for most part-time teachers," said Williams. "You wouldn't have the continuity from a part-time faculty as you do with the full-time faculty. Full-timers have other obligations to an institution, unlike part-timers, than strictly teaching."

Williams continues, "By employing a faculty made up solely of part-time teachers, you have negated the resource of someone who could be dedicated to an institution."

It would also be to the disadvantage of the students. "Because part-timers don't have office hours," says Williams, "a student may not be able to meet individually with the teacher."

Williams is no way suggesting that part-time teachers take away from the quality of a student's education. "Both our full-timers and part-timers have the same qualifications," Miller agrees. "Being a part-timer doesn't mean a teacher is better or worse, just less convenient."

Inevitably, the rise or decline will depend upon enrollment and the 60-40 balance. An enrollment rise, so will the number of part-time teachers; yet not so much as to tip the scales of the balance. "Our resource," said Williams, "is our people." But, he adds, "it's a delicate balance."

NEXT WEEK: Full-timers look at part-timers.

No increase in room temp. seen

by MIKE SEMKLS

If students have been cold in any class lately do not look for any sort of relief, due to President Carter's energy policy of passive building temperature control. The required temperature this year is 65 degrees F which is down from the 68 degree F temperature enforced last year by the Dept. of Energy.

The following areas exempt from the 65 degree requirement are library, nurse laboratory, the children center, the computer room, the TV center, and the tape library. Rosemary Murray, the registered nurse in the Health Service center, said, "We are seeing an awful amount of cold this year. But, we can not attribute that to the lower building temperature."

The temperature readings are taken from the top of the desk. Many people find that this is not an accurate way of determining temperature. Carl Butterfield, power plant operating supervisor, said, "The term is stratification. The warmer air is near the ceiling while the much cooler air is found near the floor. To give us a uniform way of determining temperature we use desktops."

Each morning Mike Klasa checked every classroom for temperature with an electronic thermometer. The thermometer is accurate to 2 of a degree. In most every case all rooms are within the 2 of the 65 degrees requirement.

But, like most things in life where many people are concerned, the power plant people receive many complaints on the room temperatures. "We check out every complaint," Klasa said.

"We have gotten more complaints this year than last year," Carl Butterfield said. "Many people are not sure of just what 65 degrees feels like, a lot of the time people think it is colder than it actually may be."

"Last week a counselor in A building said it was too cold. She was dressed in a high cut dress, while the other counselor was dressed in a tweed suit combination, she said it was 68. We checked out the temperature and it was 2 degrees higher than federal law," Al Tempkin said.

If the federal controllers come in they could fine Harper $10,000 if they find Harper continually abusing temperature control. In most cases though they will give warnings. Harper has yet to be fined.

"In any moment in time there is bound to be someone who is going to complain about hot or cold. But, there are 740,000 square feet to control and in 13 different buildings," Al said.

"The heat or air conditioned air comes from the side by the overhead lights. Many times people pay too much hot or too much cold comes out, but, quite frankly, this is air which is the right temperature. Last week a teacher complained and said the air coming out is too cold. I checked with the thermometer and the air was nine degrees over the limit," Al said.

Al gave his advice in trying to stay warm this year and said, "Sit away from outside walls, minimize cold by wearing appropriate clothing. Invest in more sweaters this year or buy yourself an arctic forces amount of vitamin C."

New T.V. Club

by NORA NORTON

If you were between exams at Harper the week before Christmas, perhaps you had a chance to watch the TV production put on by the newly formed Videotape Production Club.

In full color, too! The tape was produced for the Christmas season. In the spirit of Christmas, the students stopped at The Boston Place where the bartender mixed up using creme de menthe to make a pale green grasshopper and the other using creme de menthe for nuts with creme de cacao to make a pink squirrel topped with a green dive.

From there the group went to Woodfield to tape unusual items in shop windows as a suggestion for Christmas gifts.

The store managers were quite accommodating and didn't mind our tapes at all, said Gary Kochersperger, one of the club members and spokesperson for the club. From Woodfield, the members came back to Harper to interview some students about the meaning of Christmas.

The total time of the videotape was 18 minutes, very close to the estimate of 20 minutes which the students made in the planning stages. Initially the club started in September with 15 members, but we had trouble getting everyone together to work on the production," said Jan Myers, another member.

"What we would like to do is enlarge our membership, with each member actively involved in some phase of videotape production," he said. Each member will use his own equipment. Chuck Swan provided his color tape because Harper still has only black and white.

"One of the things we want to stress," said Kochersperger, "is that people will not be locked into just one job. Each person will have an opportunity to do camera work, script writing, editing, selling, practical training."

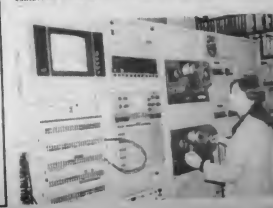

Kochersperger feels that the club can work hand-in-hand with other clubs on the campus to let the students know what is happening around them.

"We are a new club, but we have a lot of ideas in the can," he said, "and all we need are members of the club to implement those ideas."

For those who are interested, the next meeting is on Feb. 6 between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. in P110, the TV studio.

Above: Steve Lanosky and Jan Myers demonstrate the how-to of TV production. Below: Myers displays a piece of videotape from a TV monitor. The newly-found Videotape Club will meet Wednesday, Feb. 6th, 9-10 in elect. offices. For further information, contact the TV studio in P110. (photos by Rick Kubler)

Discotheque does not smell?

Throughout the existence of man, humans have developed their sense of smell. In today's American culture we have many products available to the consumer to disguise scents that we dislike. Americans more than any other culture spend more money to smell like a salesman man or woman or to make our homes smell like a rose garden 365 days of the year.

Last week, Friday night, I ventured beyond my perimeter known as my room and spent some of my hard earned money at a place known as Cinderella Rockefella. The disco cost $1.15 million and opened this past season.

Money is usually never a factor when fun is concerned. But, when the doorman said, "(NO) BLUE JEANS. NO COUGHS, YOU HAVE TO WEAR A SHIRT WITH COLLAR!" I felt bad, because my friend had to go home and change, while a couple of other friends and myself went to the local McDonald's and waited.

My friend ran up to the door of our car and screamed, "Let's go."

Moods for Mondays

by MIKE SIMKUS

We walked up to the doorman and gave him a very smile. One friend said something that was not very nice. But, we all forgot about the hassle we incurred once we were inside.

The cashier said in monotone voice, "We there was no pleasure or no emotion in the voice. We looked at each other and did not know what to think, six dollars is a lot of money to hear canned music.

After recovering from the shock we walked into the foyer. I asked the coat room for a coat in a monotone voice. I took the coin from my pocket and gave her my jacket. "After all it's just money." I repeated to myself.

Something struck me in my frontal lobe, but, what it was or how I could figure it out, was beyond me at that time.

We all quickly walked around, discovering small places to hide in, just in case we asked someone's girl to dance. While we walked around, I noticed many things which were quite bizarre. Some of the weird things were the ceilings which envelops the dancer in hues of blue, green, red, or yellow. The ceiling goes up or comes down at odd times of the songs. I suppose at the discretion of the person working the control panel. Some other oddities are the video monitors placed over one of the bars, but, what is so bizarre is that the monitors are not of a DePaul basketball game but are you ready for this of the... dance floor!

With all of these oddities, something was still bothering me. I felt like a kid because I knew I was so close to figuring it out. We then went to the dance area, we all had found a partner and started to dance. As soon as the dance was over I asked a fellow Harger student Ken Fisher, "Well, Ken what do you think of this place?" Ken said, "You can see a lot of people hurting." "What do you mean Ken, some sort of lovely hearts club?" I replied, "Yes, I suppose so," he laughed. The four words that Ken said kept repeating themselves in my mind.

Finally it struck me, just what was the matter with this place Cinderella Rockefella. It did not smell! It had no scent what to speak of. Can you imagine if Bas or Paul heard of that? Can you imagine if all the room decorators got wind of my discovery? The disco would revolutionize the deodorant industry.

With all the new furniture, the new rug, all the new paint, there was no scent. There was no evidence that human beings had ever been there.

After much thought, I noticed that people all acted as if they were mechanical. The majority acted as if they had done this many times before and anticipated doing this many times again. The people seemed to be going through the motions. As a matter of fact, they were robots. Void of any human emotions, void of any human characteristics. If you want to see, hear and feel future shock go to the disco Cinderella Rockefella. If you want to see all the programmed people, a result of our increasing world of computers go to the disco. If you want to smell what the future shock will be, stay home or better yet go to the nearest city garbage dump.

Twin brothers could be same'

My brother and I are twins, born within fifteen minutes of each other. Yet we are as different as night and day. He's very easy going, school is easy for him and he's quite reserved. I'm the other extreme. How can this be seeing as how our signs, moons, suns, etc. would be identical?

Astrology, with all of its complexities, can really make one wonder. Just how big of a difference can fifteen minutes make? Most of the planets, including the Sun, move too slow to make a significant difference. These planets represent the basic similarities between the two of us.

Astro Awareness

by JULI REALY

The Moon must be considered separately, for its position, as well as those of the signs, appear to change quite rapidly due to the earth's rotation. Because of this, there is a possibility of you and your brother having different rising signs, and different signs ruling the various houses. Although not as common, the moon may change signs as well.

Symbolically, the rising sign represents how others perceive you, your image, and the way you immediately respond to your environment. If these are different signs, they would always be consecutive in order, one being introvert, and the other extrovert. The same principle would apply to the moon's sign which symbolizes your emotional nature. This possibility could account for a lot of you being the outgoing aggressive type and the other passive and reserved.

Age is another factor that should be considered. Astrology theories that as youth, a person tends to act out the characteristics of the moon's sign and rising sign more than those of the remaining planets. As individuals mature, you could say that they sort of grow into their sun sign more and more. All persons change from childhood to adulthood and astrology does reflect this growth and change.

Unfortunately, you did not include your birth date, or your twins. Therefore, I cannot analyze precisely how astrology may account for your similarities and differences or how the sun factor may fit in. But, if you perceive yourselves as complete opposites, perhaps you fail to look below the surface. Beneath the outer personalities you may eventually begin to detect some very similar qualities, though they may develop in different ways. If you aren't aware of them yet, someday you may be.

Anyone who may be interested in astrological interpretations, please submit specific questions along with the required birth data to the Harbinger office located in Bldg A367. Look there for further details.

Harper puts six in double figures

Harper knocks out Rock Valley 104-72

by JOE KUSEK

Craig Rowles drives the baseline against DuPage. Rowles had 11 points in the game but the Hawks faced a 75-66 defeat. The Hawks take on Triton at home Friday night. (photo by Lori Lynn Gray)

Everyone is so tired! Maybe the Harper men's basketball team didn't actually flounder last night as it was clearly obvious that the Hawks unconsciously enjoyed their rout of Rock Valley last Thursday night. Last time the two teams met the Hawks were jobbed by the officials, and Harper suffered a one-point loss. This time it didn't matter what the officials did as the Hawks blew Rock Valley off the court 104-72.

"Everyone was psyched for this one," said freshman guard Dave Strawn, who has emerged as a starter for the Hawks. "We were up for this one after the DuPage game."

The win improved Harper's NET conference mark to 7-4 and its overall record to 13-9.

"We played our style of basketball," said head coach Roger Bechtold. "We could have won by three people and when we can board with people we're tough, then that enables us to generate our fast break."

"I think when we switched to man-to-man it ignited us. We stole the ball and created a lot of turnovers," Bechtold continued. "I was proud of the way we played. We've been having a lot of bad games lately but they went out and played. Tonight we just did everything well."

The two squads played even most of the first half until the Hawks started erasing their mistakes. Harper got hot and outscored the Trojans 16-4 in the last four minutes of the first half. During the hot streak Jeff Martiniski accounted for eight Harper points and Bob Dorsey put in six more. The Hawks hit 46 per cent of their shots from the floor with Dorsey bagging 14 points before going into the lockerroom at intermission.

In the second half, Harper survived some incredible calls and then on calls at all by the officials. The Hawks' Tim Logan was whistled for his fourth foul only four minutes into the second half, then Strawn was called for two fouls in a 30-second span. He didn't last much longer, fouling out with 12 minutes remaining in the game, leaving after pumping 11 points for the Hawks. This enabled Rock Valley to pull within 11, but that was all she wrote for the Trojans as Harper put together another scoring spurt. The Hawks opened up their lead to 30, 38-08 on buckets by Craig Rowles, Martiniski, Chris Plazak and four free throws by Mike Bayless.

Harper just padded his lead on free throws as Rock Valley hacked away in an attempt to get the ball. Free throws proved to be a big factor as the Hawks were 23-26 from the line in the second half, while Rock Valley went 7 for 21 from the free throw stripe.

The Hawks put six players in double figures and another had none for the winners. Martiniski led Harper with 20 points, with Dorsey and Rowles pumping in 18 apiece. Logan added 15 along with dish out seven assists and having five steals. Plazak poised in 15 and Strawn threw in 12. Bayless chipped in nine points after coming off the bench and Bechtold got good play from Steve LaBreck and Brad Miller.

The previous Tuesday night the Hawks couldn't shut down DuPage's big man in losing 70-56. The game was much closer than the score indicated as the Hawks were only down by five with two minutes remaining in the game.

In front of the biggest home crowd of the year it was DuPage's turn to get revenge as the Hawks outfire in the season dumped the Chippareals 73-70. Behind Rowles' 12 first half points the Hawks led 23-26 at the half. But Harper could not hold on as DuPage took advantage of the Hawks' height disadvantage, throwing in alley-oop passes to their 6'7 center, with the Hawks tallest player at 6'4 and that tended to favor DuPage as they are bigger inside."

"It was a physical ballgame and that tended to favor DuPage as they are bigger inside," said Bechtold. "What hurt us was not getting any calls down the stretch if had seemed the officials put their whistles away when Harper had the ball."

Harper only hit 34 per cent of their field goal attempts while DuPage made good on 60 per cent of theirs.

"They did a good job of stopping our inside plays and we were cold from the outside," said Bechtold, whose team takes on Triton Friday night at home. "The game was much closer than the score indicates. But when we got behind we tried to rush down court and get the good shot but made some turnovers which they converted on. Then we had to foul to get the ball and they hit the free throws."

Women gymnasts easily defeat Triton

by JOE KUSEK

Just when the sun had started to shine on the Harper women's gymnastics team, somebody pulled the shade.

The team, coming off a big win over Triton, suffered a big loss when Anne Beringer broke her wrist and dislocated her elbow during a practice session.

"It was a freak accident, she wasn't doing anything new," said gymnastic coach Renee Zeller.

Beringer started competing in January and immediately started helping the team. She won the all-around competition at the DuPage Invitational and more recently won the all-around for the Triton meet.

Harper knocked off Triton in a dual meet on 22-46, 8 to establish itself as the top optional team for Illinois junior colleges.

In the uneven parallel bars, Sandy Cugliaglieri captured first place with a score of 6.25. Anne Beringer placed second with a mark of 5.4.

Mary Beth Black was a double-winner for Harper, taking first on the balance beam with a 4.25 and winning the floor-er by earning a score of 7.5. Kathy Blake placed second with a 7.00 and Beringer was third with a 6.65 giving Harper a 1-2-3 sweep in that event.

The all-around was taken by Beringer with a composite score of 25.00. She also placed second on the balance beam scoring a 6.0 for the night. The victory puts the Hawks as the team to beat going into the Hagans IV meet coming in February but have been hit by the injury jinx. Along with Beringer, Kathy Blake and Barb Polvere are nursing injuries.

"It's a strong possibility we could go to nationals," said Zeller. "But we have to get everyone healthy. If we go, hopefully we'll be representative. I don't want people to say we made it in because everyone was not that good. With Anne out the pressure is on everyone to just raise their scores."

The Hawks travel to Triton for a rematch Wednesday, Feb. 6 for an important 7 p.m. meet.

Wrestlers prepare for N4C; Weber, Leggett lead way

By WAYNE HENDRUM

Norm Lovelace thought about this season's wrestling situation for maybe a second or two. "You know, we've been hanging on this year by the skin of our teeth," he said when asked how his wrestling team has managed to get this far through the season—a season which has brought Lovelace's team more injuries than in any year that he can ever remember.

"I've been here six years," he said, emphasizing the figure, "and never have I had so many injured wrestlers in one season. We are hurtin' for certain."

"But," he added, "these kids have guts. When we need the crucial pin, we get it. The guys have come through every time they've needed to. Otherwise, we would be just another team."

Being just another team is not in the cards for Lovelace this season, however, his team is too good for that. Training DuPage in the N4C Conference by one match (DuPage is 6-0, Harper 1-0) in conference, the Hawks still have a shot at knocking them off Feb. 9 in the Conference Meet at Glen Ridge.

The Hawks lost to DuPage 23-21 earlier this year, but Lovelace figures that with Jay Evans (120) back after having two operations on his left ear, and other Hawk wrestlers recovering from other minor ailments (Ed Broderick, 100, has not to mention torn muscles, torn knee cartilage, and twisted ankles, the Hawks will have an outside chance of winning the conference meet.

Lovelace can take comfort in the fact that all 11 of his wrestlers have records over the Jan. mark, among them Evans (160), Dan Weber, 138-25-1, and H.D. Leggett, 142-36, 133-11.

One of the main problems for the Hawks this season has been the disadvantage of having to defend one or two weight classes due to injuries.

In the heavy-weight division, Sean Stead is out with torn knee cartilage, and other weight classes have had to be filled in with other wrestlers. Lovelace indicated that, although his top men have been hurt at times, "we've always had other guys to do the job they had to do. We have talent all down the line."

"This is one heckuva team we have here."

The wrestling team was 18-3 last season against Division I, II, and III schools. The year of opponents for that year included Purdue and Indiana universities.

"I think that's saying a lot for my boys," stressed Lovelace. "You're talking about some big name schools there, and we knocked some of them off. In fact, I know that a few of our guys could make those teams. We've had quite a few wrestlers get picked from the bigger universities."

The Northwest Suburban area is one of the most competitive spots for college wrestling in the country, according to Lovelace. He also feels that the N4C division, of which Harper is a part, is also one of the best college wrestling divisions in the state.

Leading wrestlers to the bigger schools creates a conflict for Lovelace. When transferring, he feels proud that his wrestler has found a place to expand his talents and receive greater publicity, but on the other hand he "hates to see the kid go."

"There are two things I'll never get used to," he said, "trying to collect his thoughts. 'One is having to let a kid go after one year of excellent wrestling because he got a scholarship or what have you. Secondly, I hate to see a kid who I know is a good wrestler decide, for one reason or other, not to come out."

Lovelace looked towards the window overlooking the gym, and shook his head. "There goes one up the stairs now," he said almost mournfully. "He's a good wrestler, but his priorities aren't in wrestling. What a waste of talent. But, I guess you have to make a choice you know."

Lovelace expects his team to be ready for the conference on Saturday, but doesn't expect any miracles. "We'll go with who we have," he said, then grinning, added, "and that's usually been good enough."

Pfaender nets 39 Hawks beat DuPage in women's b-ball

By JOE KIEZEK

Quick! Lock them up before they get away. Maybe if there is a Santa Claus they will play for Harper forever. Or at least put them under police protection so nothing happens to those two.

Those "two" are Kathy Pfaender and Val Webster who combined for 72 of Harper's 94 points in the Hawks' 94-80 victory over DuPage last Tuesday night.

Pfaender, a freshman, tallied for 30 points, the highest total all year for men's and women's basketball. Sophomore Webster hit 32 points including going seven for eight from the free throw line.

Harper, with the N4C conference win, upped its record to 7-7 overall and 2-4 in conference action. They will take on Norwalk-King tonight in a non-conference game with tip-off at 7 p.m. Their next N4C conference game is when they travel to Triton Thursday for another 7 p.m. battle.

"We played much better tonight than we did in the Thornton game," Harper said, "and wanted a head coach, Tim Teacher. We were more aggressive and we were getting more rebounds."

Harper's long awaited victory was limited when Viv Webster went out with a knee-injury early in the second half. Webster just came off a different injury and was playing in her first game in two weeks.

"Viv made a big difference. She was making the passes we needed," said Teacher. "That hurt as we were waiting for her to come back."

The Hawks found themselves down by six late in the first half, DuPage getting Harper in three on one and three on two situations with Hawk guards Mary McTigue and Karen DeMou all alone on defense.

Webster and Pfaender then ignited a Harper rally as the Hawks overcame DuPage 21-0 in the last four minutes in the first half.

Webster started things off by picking off an errant DuPage pass and hitting Pfaender with a perfect pass for the easy lay-up. Pfaender knocked the game up by hitting nothing by net on a 1-foot jumper from the baseline.

The Hawks also got baskets from Lew Ann Base who scored on a rebound and Viv Webster added a basket by hitting a lay-up after driving down the key through traffic. Pfaender was responsible for one of the game's best plays as she wanted a DuPage player to save a sure basket then took off in the opposite direction with the ball to score herself.

With Pfaender hitting for 20 and Webster adding 15 more, the Hawks took a 10-0 lead into the lockerroom at intermission. Harper increased its lead to 29-20 with seven minutes left in the game. Teacher cleared the bench to give everyone some playing time as the Hawks coasted to the win.

"This win has been a long time coming," said Webster, who also led for the team lead in rebounds with nine. She dealt out seven assists and accounted for four steals for a balanced game.

"We played with more intensity and controlled the game more than we did against Thornton."

Pfaender besides throwing in 26 points had nine rebounds, six assists and three steals.

Mary Ann Larson came off the bench to help Linda Arnold, Debbie Dilks and Lynda Strebeck.

Harper did not run as well the next night, losing to Loyola 24-17. The Hawks were led in scoring by Pfaender with 16. Two other scorers were 14 and Webster added 13 for Harper.

Senate lacks interest and cause

"Have a suggestion? Well, shove it!"

So reads the poster hanging above the Student Senate suggestion box located at the main entrance of Bldg. A. Is this just a play on words or does it truly reflect the sentiments of the senate?

One of the main duties of the senate is allocating a very large budget to the various clubs and organizations on campus. Obviously, that task is taken care of year after year. But the Student Senate, the representative body of Harper's enrollment, could certainly do much more for the benefit of the students.

Primarily, the senate should publicize itself to the student body. Meeting times and places should be posted allowing students to attend and have a voice in their governing body.

Another possibility is "public meetings", that is holding the meetings in a popular spot on campus. The A Bldg. lounge would provide a seemingly perfect place to hold these meetings. It is well populated with students at most times of the day and it is a central location.

"Haunting" the cafeteria would serve a double purpose for the senate. Just by strolling around senators could pick up on student opinion and ideas while at the same time making themselves familiar to students.

While they were doing this haunting, senators could conduct polls on various issues concerning the campus. Currently, the idea of an escort service is on the senate floor. This would provide escorts through the parking lot for night students. A small announcement was made in this issue of the Harbinger. It merely gave the senate office extension number and asked interested students to phone in their opinions.

The Harbinger does reach a good number of people and the announcement should be placed in it. But why should the senate expect students to come to them? The entire concept would have more of an impact if the senate actually conducted a poll on the issue along with the announcement and showed students that they are sincere in their efforts.

Polls could also be taken on establishing a real lounge for students, the somewhat forgotten bike path, getting better furnishings for the current lounge or even work on replenishing the snack bar in the lounge.

An effort to reach the students has been made on the part of the Senate with the addition of the suggestion boxes. However, the choice of location leaves something to be desired. The main entrance of A Bldg. may well be the busiest place on campus with people coming and going all day. But naturally, the box is facing the going direction.

Senate could also work on getting more people to attend Harper sporting events, increasing the scope of live WHCW broadcasts and, in general, generating activities so that new faces will be seen mingling with the "die hards".

These problems are not new to the senate and are familiar to any college: the recent resignation of a president and the swearing in of a new one simply resurfaced them. Under new and proper leadership, the senate has a golden opportunity to redeem themselves in the eyes of the student body.

The senate simply needs a cause to become the echoing voice of the student body rather than the fading whisper of a few.

I.M.G.'s - I don't like 'em either

During the course of one of my more recent visits to the men's lavatory in A building, I came across a little verse that grossly captures my sentiments about the Iranian Crisis.

This verse, which I discovered hidden in a fan review of the bathroom stall, strikes me as reminiscent to Ernest Hemingway. However, Walter Jacobson would be purple with envy. It is only three lines long, but as my English teachers before me, an admirer of quality, not quantity. So here goes:

I hate Iranians,
I hate motorcycle gangs,
I hate Iranian motorcycle gangs, more than anything.

I must confess that I have never seen an Iranian motorcycle gang, but as my anonymous post friend implies two evils compounded can get pretty nasty.

Perhaps my friend was attempting to draw an analogy, however vague. Picture, if you will, 10,000 Russian troops and 2000 Russian tanks in the Iranian oilfields on the brink of the Persian Gulf. Now that's one hellava motorcycle gang! But aside from the obvious surface meaning, my friends poem, despite its lackluster presented manner, holds an even deeper meaning to me. We all know that there are 50 Americans who are being held hostage in Tehran. But do we really realize it? Television has brought all 100 days of the crisis into our living rooms, and as I hang over, but can we fathom the impact on the hostage lives?

When thinking in terms of our immediate needs, we can certainly realize the impact world events have upon our lives. Considering the price of gas may rise to $2 a gallon this summer, we can easily sympathize with ourselves.

Another good "for instance" is the possibility of another military draft. With the

FROM THE DESK OF VINZ BARNABICH REPORTER

Russians moving into neighboring Afghanistan, there is very real threat to our national necessities, more specifically the oilfields in the Arab states which are being harassed by the Russian invasion. Certainly we can sympathize with the young men (and women) who may again have to go abroad to defend America.

What my friend's verse has indirectly forced me to do, then, is realize the impact of events that at first appear to be totally irrelevant to my life, and yet eventually force me to take notice of what is really going on.

Looking back at the 100 days before the Iranian Crisis, these were events that did not hold much importance for the majority of us, but have now become a direct pipeline of emotions in our lives. There are, of course, the high costs of gas and the possibilities of a military draft. I have already mentioned. And now, because of the Russian invasion, there is a chance that the United States will boycott the 1980 Summer Olympics scheduled to be held in Moscow. The tragic irony is we, the United States, would have to fight for Iran's autonomy. I should our antagonists in the Middle East be attacked by Russia from the south.

This brings me indirectly back to my friend's poem. There are those patriots, like my friend, who are willing to give in their country. And there are those patriots who, like myself, are willing to give because of their country. The 50 American hostages in Tehran are both.

And it is to them I have dedicated this poem, which is a result of inspiration from my friend's poem.

Violence is red,
War is for a few,
Look out Iran,
We're gonna get you.

Do part-timers effect jobs?

by MIKE RANBATH
Third of a four-part series

On January 25, 1979, the Harper Board of Trustees okayed $700,000 worth of budget cuts, including the release of 16 full-time faculty members and the cancellation of three career programs.

Two reasons were given for the cuts. Primarily was Harper's inability to increase the tax levy. In 1978, the college requested a 7.5 increase in taxes for every $100 assessed valuation, but district voters turned down the proposal. The second cause was due to the school's accumulative deficit spending. Almost one million dollars were cut out of the school's 1979-79 budget and Harper's total deficit, or expenditure is expected to reach that figure by the end of this fiscal year.

An offsetting factor in the school's operating deficit should be tuition $145 per cent of its enrollment, while the school's tuition costs are the second highest in the state. The other one-third of revenue comes from taxes and state appropriations. Harper receives 31 cents for every $100 assessed valuation from taxes and a fixed amount of dollars from the state for generated credit hours.

However, 750 of the tax monies goes to the operating fund and more than half of the tuition money goes to personal expenditures.

During the 1979 financial crisis, both faculty and administration became involved in a crisis of their own.

First, the faculty blamed the board for breaking their word in August of 1978, a Board lawyer told the faculty regulators that the Lay-off clause in the teacher's contract would be used only as a last measure. In that same month, Harper president John McGrath celebrated that faculty lay offs will be used only after all other budget-cutting measures are used. In September, McGrath again said that faculty lay-offs would be used only as a last measure. Then, five months later, the Board announced their decision to lay off 17000 from the school's budget. Since then, however, seven of those laid-off faculty members have been rehired in different positions. What have been the effects of the 1979 budget cuts? For one, there has been an increase in part-time faculty. And, while there has been a slight decrease of full-time faculty.

But, as the full-time faculty claimed in 1979 and 1981 there a lack of parity between part and full-time faculty.

"The common feeling among full-time faculty," explained associate professor of psychology Frank Oliver, "is that we have nothing against part-timers per se. But we do feel there should be more full-time faculty."

What Oliver is alluding to is the "fixed" number of full-time faculty to part-time faculty, which is 60-40 "the ratio," he feels, "is not correct." Louisa Palmer, associate professor of English, agrees with Oliver. "I think we should hire more full-time faculty."

But as Oliver points out, "It's just cheaper to use part-timers." Palmer, meanwhile, sympathizes with the part-time faculty. "They should be getting a better deal, not only from Harper, but from every school."

Neither Oliver nor Palmer see disadvantages to part-time faculty. "It would be difficult," said Oliver, "to run the school without part-timers. There are certain programs which almost require part-time faculty."

"I've gotten some good reports from students on part-time faculty," said Palmer.

Oliver, however, does see a problem in the continuity of part-time faculty. "They are not equal in what we give to the school," he said. "Full-timers are more aware of the scheme of things."

Dr. David Williams, vice-president of academic affairs, is certain that none of the problems that arose in 1979 will resurface at Harper, as is in the current Chicago school crisis. "We try," said Williams, "to stay five years ahead of our budget." He adds, "For the next year I can guarantee there will be no more cuts in the faculty."

Books will be bought back

by NORA NORTON

If students want to rent a typewriter or a stenotype machine at the Harper bookstore they can, but if they want the store to buy books back this term, it's too late.

Mrs. Pat Furtak, the manager of the bookstore, explained that they can't buy books back now because they don't know what books are going to be used next term.

"We'll buy back books the week of finals and the next week or two weeks, if we need them," she said, adding that "the best time is the first week."

Some of the publishers put out books every two years, so the bookstore has to buy the new editions since the old ones are not available.

That is why there are some books available on the "shelf" for prices as low as 25 cents.

"Last year I believe we sold about $100,000 worth of books, new and used," said Mrs.

All of the publishers give a suggested retail price with the store adding 20 percent for profit, and it's the same with soft goods and clothes.

"For art supplies, the suppliers give a suggested list price and we mark the supplies down 10 percent in order to keep competitive with local suppliers who order more quantities and can charge less," she said.

'mind is on the brink of genius'

"I am presently majoring in economics, but the subject confuses me. Should I continue or change my major to another field of study?"

It is of no surprise to anyone that the theories of economics can be confusing and difficult to comprehend. Our Congress, as a majority, can not even decide as to which policies should be implemented to solve the national economic problems today. Don't let this discourage you in your attempts to master it, for you definitely have the capabilities for success in this area.

You are bright, intelligent, practical and analytical. Your mind is on the brink of genius, but there is one factor emphasized in your chart, that may hinder your studies. Intellectually, your mind works on a very innovative basis, piecing together information in its own way, in an unusual, abstract manner. You learn and absorb knowledge the best on your own.

This has both negative and positive qualities. Negatively, it may be difficult for you to grasp concepts as they are presented to the majority in a normal classroom situation. You may have to delve into the subject matter independently, utilizing the many resources as an

by JULI REALY

necessary. Unfortunately, accredited independent study programs are not available for all subjects. Another problem that you may have to deal with is that of building up discipline and self-motivation needed to pursue studies on your own.

On the positive side, you have the intuition and talent to formulate brilliant insights and solutions to difficult problems that are often unobtainable through the usual rational procedure. Your mind and your ability to intense concentration combined with efficient organizational skills, provide you with the background to excel in any field of research, scientific study or analysis.

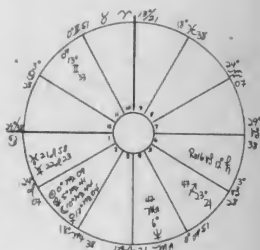

While I feel that economics is an excellent career choice for you, there are other areas you could do so very well in: engineering, medicine, health, nutrition, food processing, labor, design, management consulting, business, literary criticism, or any field that requires specialized skill or knowledge. You may find that working through a government agency or institution for a social cause would bring you a great deal of satisfaction.

There are indications in your chart that you may have been experiencing a period of personal and emotional stress throughout the past two years or so. Your health and energy level may have been greatly depleted. Wornness and the need for adjustments may have interfered with your studies. This time period should have brought about serious changes in your personal values, attitudes towards self-worth, and forms of self-expression.

I'm pleased to let you know that the peak of this "stress cycle" is just about over. A few more minor tensions may arise which you should be able to work out by mid-summer. By then, (realistically) your life should take a positive turn, bringing you renewed vitality, optimism, and many opportunities for personal and intellectual growth. Good Luck!

'We mean it, maan!'

Each rock's real generation has had their share of words or terms that set each generation apart. Remember the words, "huh", "cat", "ma", "maan, maan" all of which meant the same thing. Well there are many terms which are unfamiliar with the older generation and of some of the younger people who are not with it!

"Ma man it, maan!" This saying is most familiar with the punk rockers. From the Sex Pistols "God save the Queen" the term means exactly what it says, they mean it. What it refers to is the shape in which England is in today. When pronouncing the term, make sure you extend the sound.

"Punk" according to Webster's dictionary, it means a male homosexual in prison. The word today is most usually applied to a person who likes elementary music and lyrics. Usually the music is very primitive and very loud.

"Be per eed a abt!" This is probably one of the most prominent sayings by any of the new generation of musicians. Application is almost universal. It can be applied to movies, presidents, automobiles, colleges.

"New Wave", a term referring to the music which is most usually electronic pop sounding. Groups such as Talking Heads, B52's, Cars, and Devo.

"Fags" so this is not the familiar term that youngsters use to jump around with it is a dance that the punk or new wave dancers do in the new wave bars and dance-halls. Usually this word is used very much in the pop and

Words for Moderns

by MIKE MENKUS

most men. Most people say, "hey, buddy", instead of "hey, man."

"Fak" the Leave It to Beaver said of saying you and your buddies are friends. I have found this is a real buzz word amongst the local night club elite.

"Blackhead" this word has not changed in definition since the first time it was first used. It is a negative way of saying the person is not in touch with the real world. This music that the term is most correct are the groups Led Zep, Rush, AC/DC, usually the heavy metal sound of the early 70's. The word is used frequently describing a cult following of a certain Chicago radio station, their logo "seen all over Chicagoland."

"Boog Boy" a term for a person who is developing in evolutionary terms. The group Tava is recognizable.

"Grow-up" a word describing a person who is supposed dead, nothing to do with adults. I suppose the correct definition is a number. Usually a person who has forgot just what life is all about.

"Woke" not exactly a old word, but a word that has been used in Britain for quite some time. It has been used more often now that English groups are more popular.

Some people have made up cute, short title terms which are frequently said in some of the new wave clubs.

"I'm kinda woozee". If you run into someone who says this to you, I advise two things. First, check to see if there is a pulse, if there is run away. Second if there is no pulse call an ambulance, this person is on drugs.

"I ain't no limburger" Of course this is not the cheese. What it is a way of saying "why won't you dance with me?"

"You may see this on a bathroom stall or even bumper stickers. It means exactly what it says.

As far as I know words like "hup", "gag", "vut", "dig it" still mean that they always did, but when the two poster letters are struck together it means the person is a homosexual.

I have listed most of the words which are used frequently. If you know of any more please contact me, in A307 or ext. 461.

Pleasure Principle

Gary Numan in another step in an ever-changing musical world. Many people wonder: "What is Gary Numan?" I am assuming the keyboard-based music, or as my friends like to call it, "break out" music, is the dominant force of the 80s. Well if that is true, Gary Numan should be a star in the near future.

On the double record jacket of Principle, he gives his special

Review

Principle he gives his special thanks to his band who turned basics into songs. And that's what the typical contents of the album are: basic. With song titles that cover tracks beyond one word, and short, to the point sentences, you have to wonder how he can make a good album. But with his mysterious, new-wave voice (almost like early Bowie) he dominates songs, in such songs as "Metal Tracks" and "Conversation This is Well-Evident." The first track of the album, "Ariane," is an instrumental piece showcasing the musical talent of Gary Numan and his band, (formerly Tubeway Army). But that name was dropped after the Republics album, the only member still here. Complex is a song that reached the charts in England, but I see it as one of the poorest selections because of the costumes and rather poor mix of vocals and keyboards. I wonder what the flipside was? Maybe it was "Cars," a song with outstanding vocals and a big bass background. The song seems to be getting noticed by most radio stations and new wave bars in Chicago. Most of Gary Numan's songs on Pleasure Principle seem to have a mix of a fast drumbeat with lullaby keyboard and persuasion, synthesized tone, and the always outstanding vocals. Song like "Pipes, Observer" and "M.E." all fit into this category. At the end of M.E. Gary Numan and Chris Payne also do keyboards, show how talented they are.

Although this album is not as disconcerting as Replicas, and the lyrical content is not as deep as Replicas where Gary asks a logical question: are friends "electric" it is a finely produced album, with less guitar and more keyboards. In my opinion, Gary Numan is a genius. I mean who else could write all his songs, sing them, play guitar, keyboards and persuasion, and then go produce the album. Watch out for this man in the upcoming decade.

Live Without a

Net Angel

"There's 10 songs, it's live, and it takes about 10 minutes before it's all over—and that's most of the advantages of listening to Angel's "Live Without a Net." Maybe it's a secret live band singer Frank Zappa following out redundant shouts of "Hello, Los Angeles!" "Are you ready, Los Angeles!" and other time-worn pieces of conversation rock singers consistently use. "Love Without a Net" would be an OK album.

However, I rate it as low, well, maybe between fair and good, because it does have some good rock buried in all of the distorted guitars and synthesizers.

This is not to say that rock guitars are supposed to sound like how Clark at Carnegie Hall and synthesizers like the kind you hear at Woodland piano shops, but they're surely not supposed to sound as though somebody just turned them on, lit them with a hammer, and let them burn until they faded out.

Indeed, the recording of "Live Without a Net" has to be desired. The entire cassette album was recorded at the Santa Monica Live Center and the Long Beach Arena, so the sound quality rarely changes from the mediocre recording it is.

Of course, Angel is not known for their sound productions. In fact, on their three previous LPs, "Believe Band," "White Hot," and "On Earth As It Is in Heaven" the band got away with similar distorted recordings of "Can You Feel It?" "I'll Leave Me Lonely," and their small success "White Lightning."

But the difference between these records and this one is simple: I didn't see anything about Los Angeles on the studio version, and I the studio album weren't recorded at the Santa Monica Live Center and the Long Beach Arena.

Angel is not a bad band. It's just that they haven't found a way to get into their songs, since which could well be top selling.

If they can find a way to record their tunes with more quality, Angel will be a much more common name in music commercial use among high school and college students.

London Calling

the Clash

"Not too long ago a program on ABC named "20/20" analyzed the new wave movement currently in the rock 'n' roll world. Joe Strummer, guitar player of the group Clash said, "Americans have forgot what rock 'n' roll is all about," when he was asked why the Clash were in America. Mick Jones simply interjected, "it's not about the right chord for a start either." The Clash may be serious punks, but the new album from the Clash is just pop.

The new lp is a double effort, the cover is like Elvis Presley's by Elvis Presley. The artwork was intentional because the Clash is of the same breed. Elvis was, simple music and lyrics.

In past lip "Give Em Enough Rope," "The Clash," the group (disparaged) all outside on the in England which had seen great unemployment, the continuing war with the I.R.A., police and thieves, racism, racism, and the feeling you would have if you were a youth living in England.

The Clash does not abandon its feelings or the problems of today's youth, but that it has done is round out all the rough edges which make the Clash new sound like a power pop group.

On this lp I can count five songs which could be possible AM radio hits. The most prevalent is "Sand Me" (the song opens with a harmonica which drifts in and out of the song. As a matter of fact the song reminds me of a duet by the Marvelettes, or Martha Reeves and the Vandellas.

"Wrong 'Em Boys" a new approach in Clash music contains the most brain the group has ever used. Diverse as this lp is, they do not capture too many avenues which would have shown a lack of direction.

If you like early Who or some jazzes issue, I think you might enjoy the latest from the Clash. If you aren't know about the Clash you had better buy two copies, because you will play your first copy out.

Women throw game away vs. Kennedy-King

by JOE KUSEK

While most students around Harper have been hit by the flu bug, the women's basketball team, caught that dreaded disease "turnoveritis".

The Hawks literally threw their game away against visiting Kennedy-King last Monday night, being 0-40.

Harper committed over 30 turnovers in the non-conference game, dropping its overall record to 7-4.

"We played terrible," said women's coach Tom Teschner, who was not too pleased with the way his team performed. "We just made too many fundamental mistakes. We weren't moving the ball and not thinking out there in the first half we threw away about six or seven 50's and 1 and 2's. In the second half we kept them in the game with free throws."

Harper survived 20 first half turnovers to take a 33-36 lead at halftime. In the first half the Hawks were led in scoring by center freshman Lee Ann Rose who dumped in 15 points.

The Hawks increased their lead to 43-36 early in the first half but a rash of turnovers and a three-point play enabled Kennedy-King to take the lead for the first time 46-44 with 11 minutes remaining in the game. Harper regained the lead for the last time when Kathy Pfleiser, put in a lay-up after a steal.

Three times Harper pulled within one, but could not keep the momentum as turnovers always put them a step back after moving two steps forward.

The closest the Hawks came was when Mary Ann Larson connected on an inside shot to make the score 50-48 with 7 m showing on the clock.

If anyone has a spary leg to denote they should contact sophomore Val Weidner. Weidner, one of the team's leading scorers, was hampered the whole game by shin splints. Then to cap things off she suffered an ankle injury on the same leg late in the game to setback the Harper offense. Despite being considerably slowed down, Weidner still managed to throw in 13 points.

"I like the way we started the game but basic fundamental mistakes hurt us," said Teschner, whose team plays its next four out of five remaining games at home. "We threw away a lot of passes on the fast break. They have to mark us, go to the side, then the middle. They kept trying to go to the middle first and they Kennedy-King just picked off the ball. Karen DeMona played a good game. She hustled and worked the whole game. But they gotta start playing together."

Rose led Harper in scoring with 17 points, while Pfleiser added 11 and Weidner 13. Larson in a starting role, came through with six, as did DeMona. Also logging a lot of playing time were Mary McTigue, Debbie Dika and Linda Arndt.

The women take on Moraine Valley at home tonight at 7 p.m. then play at home again this Wednesday vs. Lake County at 7 p.m.

Hawks point to nationals

by JOE KUSEK

For the next week women's gymnastics coach Rene Zeller will be knocking on wood every chance she gets.

Heading into this Saturday's NCAA Region IV meet the women carry a record of 4-0, but as Zeller is well aware of anything can happen. A prime example being Anne Berringer having lost for the season due to an injury suffered in practice.

Harper will host the NCAA Regional meet this Saturday at 11 a.m. in Bldg. M. The Hawks, having any unforeseen problems are the odds on favorites to be the ones to advance to nationals.

"The women took a big step in upping their odds on advancing to nationals by defeating every team that competes on the optional level. Their most recent win a 74-49 20 win over Triton. The score 74-4 was the highest mark they have hit all season, showing they are ready to make their mark at nationals."

"Our goal as a team now is to do our very best in Regionals," said Zeller who brought the team back to life after it folded last year. "We just need to polish our routines. The judges will be very tough at the meet and will pick up every little mistake. Just knock on wood now that nothing goes wrong."

After a little prodding from Zeller, Kathy Blake was convinced to go in the all-around and surprised herself by taking first at Triton with a nice score of 35.56.

"Kathy kept saying no, no I don't want to do beam, rope, vaults in the all-around," laughed Zeller. "She is the type that says next to you don't have a chance" but after "it's all over or I'll come back and say that was fun I really like that now."

For the same reason she was Nandy Colglaiser taking first with a score of 7.2 and Blake playing second with a 6.1. Colglaiser also won the vault with a 7.9, a personal best and the best mark registered by a Harper gymnast this season. Barb Polvere was not far behind finishing second with a 7.50.

In the beam it was Mary Beth Black with a 6.75 and "I don't want to do it," Blake second earning a 5.58. Winning the floor-ex was Blake again, busting and tumbling for a score of 6.85 with Blake second in their meet vs. Elgin it was the Hawks vs. one woman, Blake won the floor-ex with a 7.5, placed second on the bars with a 6.0 and finished third on the beam for the night.

Polvere won the vaulting for Harper, earning a score of 6.58 from the judges. Teammate Sharon Noble was second with a 5.48. Polvere later placed third in bars with a score of 5.1; Blake finished second for the all-around with a score of 22.45.

Injuries key loss to Lake County

by WAYNE RENEAU

If it isn't his wristers that are out of action, it's the officials.

"That's what happened last week when the wrestling team went up against a tough Lake County squad, being 22-21," Coach Norm Lovelace and Lake County's wrestling coach were forced to officiate the matches themselves. The officials, it seems, didn't show up for the meet.

Harper was matched as five weight divisions: 118, 126, 142, 156, and 177. Lake County, though winning only three, was on points however, the Hawks had to forfeit a couple of weight divisions due to injuries.

In addition to the lack of wristers, Lovelace feels that Lake County's coach "was calling them for his side I tried to bend over backwards not to be biased, but I don't believe he did that."

The Hawks have improved physically, with many injured or sick wristers back in action. However, the Hawks still have nobody in the heavyweight division and don't plan to when the conference meet is held at DuPage Feb 3.

Harper can still win the conference if they finish first while DuPage would have to finish third overall.

To achieve a tie for conference honors is a bit less difficult. The Hawks would have to win the meet in order to share the NCC divisional title.

Although Lovelace is not too optimistic about DuPage finishing third, he does feel that his team has a shot at sharing divisional honors. "We're working hard this week," he said, "and I hope the results will show that."

FLIPPING OUT in Mary Beth Black while teammate Cindy Curtis helps out during practice. The women defeat Triton for the second time this season to emerge as the team to beat at the upcoming NCAA Region IV meet. The Hawks beat the meet this Saturday, with the first event to start at 11 a.m. The team, having injuries, have an excellent spot at going to national, having beat the only other two teams that compete on the optional level. Against Triton the women hit their highest team score of the year to keep their record clean. (photo by Rich Herouquet)

Advice on how to avoid a ticket

by RICH BENQUINET

Being stopped for speeding or committing some other driving violation or for appearing to do so is bound to happen sooner or later to anyone who drives much. Experience has shown that how someone reacts is the major factor in determining whether or not his real-life melodrama has a happy ending. Being the quarry of a pursuer dedicated to fighting crime is almost certain to stir up feelings of guilt. If a person lets them spill over into fear or rage, he'll be lost. The situation is a familiar one for the arresting officer. He's had many rehearsal's to prepare him for it. Why not be prepared, too? Anticipation of the pressures he may apply and be ready to keep cool and use appropriate countermeasures.

First, don't let the officer assume he's curbed a defense by curbing the driver's car. Make sure control of the vehicle is kept and all maneuvers are signaled as the driver obeys his order to pull over. Once stopped, the driver should stay put in his seat, get out driver's license, and wait for the officer's approach. The driver should talk the officer why he was stopped. The officer should explain. Don't deny the charge or argue or make excuses. He expects reactions like that and is disarmed when he doesn't get them. There have been times when someone has said nothing more than an occasional monosyllable during an entire encounter. The result is usually a "we'll let it go this time" response and a warning not to do it again.

In using this semi-silent technique, be careful not to appear disdainful or outraged. Above all, never become abusive.

What if the driver hasn't blown his stack or lost his cool and the officer still reaches for his book of citation forms? Cops have been known to change their minds and put the book away when they've seen the driver pull out a clipboard and start filling out a form on their own.

If the officer persists in writing a ticket, the driver shouldn't compare what he's writing with what the officer is putting down. The stopped driver might be giving him a chance to correct a statute number that doesn't apply to the charge, rather than using that mistake as the detour later. The stopped motorist might also be able to argue the location and time as mitigating circumstances.

Hopefully, the motorist's behavior will convince the demeanor he'll convince the guardians of the law that he isn't dealing with someone unaware of his rights. Lastly, be prepared and hopefully all of the steps in preparing for the situation will "get the driver off" with only a warning. Good luck and watch that speedometer!

Part time summation: a lack of continuity

By MIKE BAMBACH

(Fourth of a four-part series)

In the Harbinger series on part-time teachers, an attempt to examine both the advantages and disadvantages of part-time faculty from the local point of administrators, full-time faculty and part-time faculty was made.

Throughout this series, one summation of part-time faculty is most apparent - the lack of continuity. Part-time art teacher Lawrence Mannato, who is in his third semester at Harper, agrees with this summation. "Part-time faculty add variety to points of view, but you can get too much diversity."

Along the same lines of continuity, there is a wonder of how the departments keep track of individual part-timers

Basically the separate departments present the part-timers with a syllabus and course outline. The department also suggests which book or books to use, but the final decision is left to the part-timer. Mannato points out that, "They [the Art department] have given me a syllabus and ideas to approach certain things and have been very good with supplies."

And yet, how do the departments know exactly what a part-timer is accomplishing in class?

"They don't," says Faculty Trustee President William Miller. "The departments will occasionally sit on a class to see how a teacher works, but that's it."

"What if," Miller adds, "a teacher has a bad day? Then the department would not have seen that teacher at his best."

There are, of course, many other situations that could befoul a teacher during such a sit-in and a department head would never realize it. Then if he is to be assumed that partial blame for the lack of continuity in the part-time faculty can be placed to the departments.

Mannato, however, sees a change. "The openness between the full-time faculty and part-time faculty has gotten much better. I don't think we have the same cause-and-effect."

David Williams, vice president of academic affairs, concurs with Mannato. "Teaching is not the primary vocation for most part-time teachers. Full-timers have other obligations to an institution unlike part-timers, thus strictly teaching."

"Being a part-timer doesn't make a teacher better or worse, but less convenient."

William Miller, vice-president of academic affairs

Mannato, who is also the head of the Fellowship of Christ ("church in this area, agrees, "I have a flexible schedule that allows me to produce work I wouldn't have ordinarily produced."

Neither Mannato, Williams, or Miller believe that part-timers take away from the quality of education. Although they receive different benefits, both full-timers and part-timers must have at least a Bachelor of Arts before getting a job at Harper.

"Being a part-timer doesn't make a teacher better or worse," said Williams, "just less convenient."

"It just comes down to," adds Mannato, "if a teacher is competent or not. Just as there are two sides to an argument, so there is one major advantage to part-time faculty to argue the major disadvantage. And that is economics. "Full-timers are all covered by contract and most of their benefits are included in contract." Therefore, "part-timers are cheaper."

Williams agrees. "You don't have to let them go," he says, "you just don't hire them."

If it is this "economic flexibility" as Williams calls it, that makes part-time faculty most advantageous. During the faculty lay-offs of last spring, many departments were forced to bring in more part-time help because of budget cuts. And, with an increase in enrollment over fall 1978 to the 1979 fall semester, necessity dictated that more part-time faculty be brought in. Now, there are 406 part-time teachers at Harper compared to only 181 full-time teachers.

This is a ratio of about 70-to-30 part-time to full-time faculty, so where near the 50-to-50 ratio of full-time to part-time faculty that Williams has called "a guideline in terms of instructional cost."

While the headcount ratio of part-timers to full-timers is almost 70-30, the ratio of actual number of contact hours is 65-40, full-time to part-time faculty.

In the long run, there are no clear cut disadvantages or advantages to part-time faculty. Economics will always dictate certain situations, while there will always be somewhat of a lack in the continuity of the faculty.

Editorial

College voters show slight

During the past two weeks, Harper took part in a voter registration campaign. Nearly 100 students took a few minutes out of their day to answer a few questions and become registered voters. While 100 is not an overwhelming figure, it may show an awakening among college voters.

The 18-21 year age group is perhaps one of the most potentially powerful of all voter groups. But on election day relatively few are found anywhere near the polling locations. A lesson can be learned from America's senior citizens. Once politically passive, senior citizens are banding together to throw their support behind various candidates and issues.

Of course, the younger crowd will always throw in the "I can't drink, I'm not going to vote" excuse without ever realizing the influence they are passing by. Groups could be organized, rallies could be promoted for a candidate who favors lowering the legal age. Another possibility would be to band together against candidates supporting legislation that would harm the younger generation.

More recently is the "if the draft comes back, I'll be sent to war and killed anyway" attitude. The draft issue is a golden opportunity for young voters to rally together and prove their political strength and maturity.

Young voters may still be politically active without participating in rallies or various groups. How many have ever taken the time to write their congressman? When the question was posed in a recent political science class, a few hands in a good sized lecture hall were raised: all hands belonged to older students returning to school.

People should not expect every 18 year old voter to plow into a campaign, but young voters should exercise their right to vote. While one vote in an election may not seem "heavy", it is a voice in the local, state or federal working government that should be heard.

ONCE AGAIN, Harper fans thrung the athletic facilities. (photo by Earl Lynn Gray)

Tiny crowds more rule than exception at Harper

What if they gave a game and nobody came?

At Harper this could happen a lot sooner than many people think, with tiny crowds more the rule than the exception.

This fact defies normal logic as one would naturally assume that with approximately 15,000 students running around the campus, that sports teams would be able to draw at least 50 spectators.

But at Harper, spectators could be classified as endangered species. They're there but you have to look for them.

Harper has one of, if not the finest athletic facilities in Big M. Everyone paid for it through taxes but it seems strange nobody wants to see what they paid for.

Harper sports teams play in the NAC conference, a conference considered to be one of the toughest in the state. If one would happen to accidentally wander into a men's or women's basketball game or any other sport for that matter, they would quickly see that the caliber of play is much higher than high school. Many athletes from the NAC go on to play major college ball, including Big Ten, Pac-Eight etc.

But the main thing that puzzles me is that all the games are free to students. Yes, FREE. No strings attached.

All one has to do is walk in, take a seat in the bleachers and watch some of the best sports action in the area. It takes more than good players or a good facility to build a winning tradition. It also takes some fan participation, the "sixth man" out there to let the players know they aren't out there for nothing.

It costs no money to attend a Harper athletic event. Here is one thing that students cannot complain about: With the games not taking any weight from your waist, here is a perfect opportunity to take a date for some excellent entertainment and not spend a penny.

From the desk of Joe Kusek SPORTS EDITOR

True, many people work after classes, but it would be nice to see some new faces instead of the same 10-15 students and the handful of parents.

Here is a perfect chance to see two of the top soccer in Illinois, when the women take on Thornton tonight at home, starting at 5 p.m. Instead of complaining how dead Harper is, show up and start making the change with yourself. Being associated with a winner begins not with the players, but you the fans. Be there. Aloha.

Student compelled to speak out

This is the first time I have ever written to a paper. It is something I have always wanted to do, but never "found the time". After thinking about Mr. Lockwood's article all week, I find myself compelled to speak out.

Last week he wrote an article entitled, "War: A Big Business Like Any Corporate Enterprise". In it, he spoke of peace. He commented that he is convinced from his travels that the people of the world are refreshing.

Idea! I just wonder what countries he visited to find this out. Were they by chance, Northern Ireland or Palestine? (Or maybe, perhaps Afghanistan.) I saw Africa, Pakistan or any of the other dozens of countries in the world who will feel the direct effect of war right now. Yet, the people of the world "all seek peace".

I consider myself an optimistic person, but I wouldn't give us longer than 30 hours before our fellow mankind would be crawling all over us. Not to exaggerate us, but rather to congratulate us. No, Hitler, you'll kill us.

checked throughout the world? Just how many professors of Humanities to you think there are in Russia?

You see, Mr. Lockwood, I support my government. And if it means I might have to risk my life for my country, than I shall. Not because I want to be some kind of hero, but because I value very much that ideal of world peace. And I want to preserve that ideal for those who now have it, and to acquire it for those who seek it.

We all have obligations and duties as citizens. Like the laws that govern our society, we either follow them or suffer the consequences. As for the draft, Mr. Lockwood, I am reminded of the words of a famous sea captain: "If you can't ride my ship when the weather is rough, than you don't deserve to be aboard when the seas are calm. Please, get off my ship." Jerry Hutchinson

Jamieson responds to Feb. 11 article

I, Barbara Jamieson, a handicapped student with Cerebral Palsy, would like to respond to the article written in the February 11th issue of the Harbinger, referring to the conditions of the walls between Building F and Building A, on the particular day I called for assistance from the Health Services the walls were not only sticky but quite slippery. I, not being the only handicapped person at Harper needing help, there were others in the same position I was in. One girl in particular, a wheelchair had received help from Lenore from the Women's Center. Lenore offered to help her because of the slippery conditions. This event this girl takes to Building A is the same route I take.

However, when I called for help, I was told the walls were clear by Lu McKay and I should proceed alone. Being cautious of the conditions, I eventually received assistance also from Lenore. When I returned to the main building, I then called my mother and told her about the situation. She immediately called Health Services and talked with Ms. McKay regarding the statement in the previous article. Ms. McKay quoted my mother incorrectly by stating that she was "perfectly supporting" what Health Services is doing. Her conversation was only stating that if conditions were completely normal "Barber can attempt the walk herself". With any type of snow, ice, slush or wet conditions I would like to have my daughter receive some assistance.

Does it hurt to HELP? Ms. McKay's other quotation, "We always try to help out when we can, but these students have to try to cope with some of the problems of their life." This may be true. I think we as handicapped people do make a genuine attempt to "cope" with many problems and do very well with what we have, however, some problems are beyond us to "cope" with which makes us turn to others for help. (When you have the handicap yourself, no one knows how far you can go or "cope".

Ms. McKay's third quote, "she is lonely and reaching out for people". Now this is an uncalculated statement. If I were lonely and reaching out for people I wouldn't be looking for them on the sidewalks. If she were aware of my activities and friends she would be able to see that my time is very full and happy because a person is "different" doesn't necessarily make them "lonely". Again, I say, I strongly believe that it is time that people come to the aid of the handicapped when they "truly need assistance". Barbara Jamieson

I happen to think that we, the people of the United States, seek world peace as well. I also believe our government actually believes in that concept of world peace. Perhaps Mr. Lockwood, the U.S. should take the lead and lay down our arms to show just how willing we are to reach that peace. Perhaps we should cut aside our weapons and instead drape flowers across our shoulders and sing out how much we love and trust our fellow mankind. It would be interesting to see just how long we would last. I

You also commented about our country supporting Fascist governments all over the world. Could the Russian invasion of Afghanistan be perhaps a just CIA-Kremlin maneuver to bolster our sagging economic system? Possibly, maybe Mickey Mouse is in reality a Russian spy as well. Just think of all the revenue they receive on Walt Disney films.

You speak about the celebration of human life. How about the suppression of life that is going on in Communist countries all over the world. What do you think would happen if we let the Russians run us

Has the melting pot burned out

Has this country become such a melting pot that there are no Americans left? Is this tolerance or is it gross negligence? Nobody likes war. Nobody likes to interrupt their life and perhaps die. But that has never prevented war. Why anyone would think that he could be killed rather than fight is beyond me. I was always taught and have come to understand, that some things are more important than others even at the cost of death.

When somebody tells me that they would go to Canada or turn a draft card, I ask myself in this person a humanitarian who would do anything he had to rather than harm another human being, or is this person so ignorant that he thinks he can avoid the war, returns at the end of the war, and continue his life totally unaffected by the outcome? The draft does not necessarily mean war. It's an essential element of a physically fit country that is alert, prepared, confident, and capable of interacting in today's world. What could be more important?

I've heard a rumor that if we step up our defense via the draft, that Russia will be offended and that we will have provoked war. I personally hold a lot of respect for a country that displays its integrity proudly through a strong solid government. To me, a country that appears to be on the way down is lacking. It seems to invite not war but invasion. The U.S. can't coast on a reputation. We need to solidify once again a nation with one of the most impressive histories in the world. This must be a united effort, and does not include entertaining such individual preferences. It means the government of the United States, elected by the people for the people, must be able to count on the people.

Draft decision awaited anxiously

Now that President Carter, a supporter of the Equal Rights Amendment, has said that 19 and 20 years olds of both sexes are to be registered, I await the decision of Congress with mixed feelings.

Remenbrance that it is me, a 19 year old cannon fodder, not someone over 20. Here, when we are to begin our lives do we see them come in such an end. Fear that "it" will happen to a brother. I don't respect heroes, it is merely luck that keeps them alive. I respect a person that will stick to their values whether they are male or female.

If it comes down to being part of a war to achieve equal rights, then I will stop cheering for their passage in order to live my life as a person.

Mulvihill authors book

by WENDY WINKELBAKE

Human Diseases
Most people do not even want to think about them, talk about them or even learn a claim about them. Dr. Mary Lou Mulvihill has gone one step further: she wrote a book on human diseases.

The book, entitled "Human Diseases: A Systemic Approach", is currently in the production stages and should be available sometime next month.

Mulvihill, who has taught at Harper for eight years, used her lecture notes as a basis for the manuscript and claims that she ran into no major problems during the actual writing.

"I think the fact that I enjoy lecturing and love teaching made a difference," she noted. "I certainly was under pressure to meet some deadlines."

The 400 page book contains study guides and glossaries within each chapter and some 300 illustrations.

"I did all the rough art, they (the publishing firm) had artists refine it. Most of the photos are from Northeast Community Hospital," commented Mulvihill.

The whole idea of writing a book came about when she was looking for textbooks suitable to the class that she was teaching. "I teach Biology 136: Introduction to Human Diseases and I was having a hard time finding a comprehensive book and one that was written at the appropriate reading level," she explained.

Textbook after textbook company after company, she could not locate the right book for the class. Sales representatives then asked if she would be interested in writing. Editors from the Robert J. Brady publishing firm, a subsidiary of Prentice-Hall which deals with books in the allied health fields, contacted Mulvihill and asked for a sample of her work. Market research began and the writing soon followed.

"That's how it all came about," laughed Mulvihill. She not only took a systematic look at diseases but took the same approach in her writing. She takes diseases of the various systems, then specifically related them back to the malfunction of the system.

"I think that it is very comprehensive but not overwhelming," she stated.

Extensive reading had to be done before the writing process could begin and Mulvihill feels that this benefited her teaching.

Provided that everything stays on schedule, the book should be available next month. It will be in paperback form making it affordable to more people.

"I hope that it serves the purpose for which I wrote it," concluded Mulvihill.

Chart shows sensitivity; security

"I would like a 1980 horoscope, and please tell me about my personality."

Looking at this chart, I immediately get two very strong impressions. The first is an overemphasis of planets in the water signs. This represents one who is extremely sensitive, moody and emotional. It also reveals abilities for the development of intuition, the creativity, imagination and compassion.

The second outstanding feature in this chart is the preponderance of planets in the seventh house, including the Sun. This house symbolizes other people in your life, and, specifically, your relationship with your partner, business, marriage... Altogether, this indicates that you are genuinely concerned with others, always considering what they feel, and how they will react to you. You want to be secure, and protective. You have an inherent need for helping people.

Your Moon in Pisces symbolizes how reflective you are of

Astro Awareness

by JILL REALY

Your surroundings, easily blending in with everyone else's moods. This fragile side of you is sturdy, down-to-earth type of image that you project. People in need of assistance may be attracted to you for this reason.

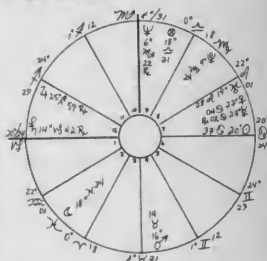

You are idealistic in your vision, and work persistently to reach your goals. You may have the tendency to get carried away with your ideas, and in turn, you may ignore rational and logical approaches to thought and problem solving. This is an obstacle you may have to struggle to overcome (the approach, that may be effective for you to try, is to associate with persons who are the intellectual type. Try Gemini, Libra, or Aquarius to aid you in these matters. Your talents can lead you to successfully pursue careers in theatre, drama, filmmaking, photography, art, music, poetry, dance, nursing, social work, or even the highly unusual fields such as mediumship, the occult or astrology. You are bound to reach your goals, but your chart indicates a long, slow, difficult one.

The year of 1980 has several possibilities for you. You may find some career opportunities made available through some friends. April may bring communications from an "old acquaintance". June promises fulfillment, with July being prime time for recommitting. Be ready for some changes as fall begins, you may run into some unexpected moneys. September should be very productive, a good time for accomplishing something practical. October may reflect tensions within a strained relationship but by the end of the year, the whole situation will take an unexpected turn for the better and should leave you ceasing to smoothly for 1981. Happy year!

Anyone wishing astrological interpretations may submit specific questions along with the required birth data to the

Columnist reviews 'new' album

This week I thought that I would like to review a record that a local record store had thrown my way.

The version of "Baby It's You" is quite different from the version done by the Shirelles. This version lacks the slickity and the beauty that the Shirelles had with the Hal David-Burt Bacharach single. There is none of the weak vocal that the Shirelles had accomplished. When the lead singer of the Shirelles said "Baby, it's you," you're positive that she means it. On this version, the singer leaves us in confusion, better yet as a state of ambiguity.

In "A Taste of Honey" my dog would not sit near my bedroom while this song was playing. It wreaks of clashing harmonies and simplistic lead guitar. I thought at first someone like the Flying Lizards were doing this song. The reason I thought that way was because it sounds like they did it, only they can make my dogs ears stand on end.

Moods for Moderns

by MIKE SIMKUS

On the song "Aina Igo to him," the vocalist pleads with the listener, he actually crouches like Simus, but on a much more contemporary way. The drummer employs a slick method like Ben E. Carson of Cheap Trick. He smacks the hi-hat in with the pleading vocal. The guitar reminds me of Nick Lowe or the guy in the Knack. At times, the beat has a flair of the Cars and then at times has an influence of the new wave.

The other songs on the LP sound so much like the Knack, the Cars, E.U.I., Cheap Trick, the Romantics, the Beach Boys, the Harmonies, as a matter of fact of every new wave group.

The songs like "P.S. I Love You," "I Saw Her Standing There," "Do You Want to Know A Secret," and "There's a Place" are not hits. They sound like every band that seems to be around on the new flood of pop and vocal music.

You, you might as well write these guys off as losers, because they do not have original sound. They will never "make it" or I could not see them get much airplay.

Most of their material is too primitive. The lip, name is "Please, Please Me" and the cover art is so lame. I mean, good god, who runs around with white shirts, black ties, black boots, nice suits and haircuts that never ridges through the style. And worse yet, the record cover in the top right hand corner says "Stereo." How corny.

Could you please wait a minute? My dog wants to come back in now that I have the aforementioned LP off and the music of the original groups back on.

Oh, by the way, I thought I should tell you who the group is so you can make sure you don't get ripped off like I did. This group, the Beatles will not make it. It's who's job? The Beatles, what a name.

UCLA recycles student records

LOS ANGELES, CA (UPI) — The UCLA dean of students office has been using confidential student grade records as scratch paper, according to a report in the UCLA Daily Bruin.

Stacks of scratch paper made from cards that included everything about students from their names to their addresses to the grade point average were discovered in the anteroom in Dean of Students Bryon Atkinson's office. The records, largely of Class of 1977 Phi Beta Kappa candidates, are illegally private. Atkinson, himself, admits their use as scratch paper, especially in a public place, probably violates both federal laws and university regulations.

"I certainly don't understand how the records were recycled as scratch paper," Atkinson told the Bruin.

"We've resolved it. The likelihood is that this cannot happen again. I'm kind of embarrassed."

It is not the first time confidential records have been released at UCLA. During an art midterm last April, a professor passed out scratch paper that turned out to be the students' transcripts of so some students.

Tennessee accused of racist overtones

KNOXVILLE, TN (CPS)—An administration attempt to redress a black student program at the University of Tennessee has led to a sit-in, a fire-bombing, the arrest of 18 students and calls for the resignation of top university officials.

Apparently, black student resentment boiled over when the school decided to transfer the popular director of black cultural programs.

On Jan. 18, Dean of Special Services William Byas announced he was proceeding with a reorganization of the campus Black Cultural Center (BCC), and that he was transferring BCC director Dennis Littlejohn to another department.

Eleven students occupied the BCC the next day, planning to stay until Littlejohn was reinstated, some favors programs were funded, and until the administration agreed to consult students before any changes at the BCC were implemented.

About 60 more students joined the occupation on Jan. 21, in time for some to be among the 18 arrested the next day when U.T. Chancellor Jack Reese called in police to clear the building.

Reese called it "the hardest decision I have had to make as chancellor. It will leave scars. It will damage the reputation of the university, and it will set back somewhat our efforts to provide genuine racial equality in the university and society."

Yes, Reese added, the students had refused to leave despite promises of immunity from both arrest and university disciplinary proceedings. The students did submit to arrest peacefully, and later were released on $200 bonds.

The negotiations before the arrests, however, had not been without incident. Dean Byas collapsed at the BCC, and was hospitalized for "overexertion." Reese kept the negotiations going into the night. When he left at 9 p.m.

the night of Jan. 21, he was followed to the elevator by Afro-American Student Liberation Force (AASLF) officer Lamisha Tafariyika Reese, according to Tafariyika, called the student a "dumbass nigger" before the elevator door closed. Reese recalls calling Tafariyika "dumbass", says he was wrong in doing so, but denies using the term "nigger". The students maintain Reese did use the term, and have added his resignation to their list of demands.

Once police cleared the building, Reese ordered the BCC closed. The order prompted another protest, this time a 200-student march to Reese's office. Reese refused to see the students, who chanted, "If you don't open the BCC, we're gonna close this U.T." The chancellor threatened further "action" if the university business was disrupted.

The troupe attracted the attention of U.S. Rep. Harold Ford (D-TN), who visited campus last week to investigate. Ford called the university's decision to discipline the 18 students who were arrested "a slap in the face" of the black community.

On Jan. 21, police arrested AASLF member Rosal Wayne Turner on charges that he firebombed the student activities office Jan. 18, two days before Littlejohn's transfer was announced.

Turner had been arrested in October 1978, for participating in an AASLF protest to the U.T. Board of Regents. Students had asked the regents to study the university's investments in firms that conduct business in South Africa. They rejected the proposal, and four students, including Turner, were arrested in the ensuing demonstration.

Current AASLF President Eddie Green announced that the Jan. 1980 firebombing incident was unrelated to the struggle over the BCC, and that Turner, whether or not he had anything to do with the incident, did not represent the AASLF.

For the moment, Dean Byas, who has returned after a short medical leave, has reopened the BCC with a formal invitation to black students to participate in the center's reorganization.

As the conflict entered its third week, racial issues were being handled more quietly on other campuses.

In Greensboro, N.C. On four former North Carolina A&T students who introduced sit-ins as a tactic in the civil rights movement 20 years ago were honored by city officials who once formally discriminated against them.

To the north, a court upheld the decision of Ulster (N.Y.) College administrators who suspended eleven white students who masqueraded as Ku Klux Klan members last Halloween.

But in Oklahoma, Klan leader John Cary announced he was beginning a campus recruitment campaign in the wake of a racial confrontation in tiny Idabel, Ok.

Men's b-ball beats Malcom X in OT

by JOE KUSEK

Many Harper fans are probably animal lovers, but the rebels that were at the men's basketball game last Tuesday night were definitely not cuddled or hugged after the game.

For most of the game it was five-on-seven (five Malcom X players and the two officials), but the Hawks prevailed with a 97-87 overtime win at their final home game of the season.

Harper was fouled for 27 fouls (including seven technicals) by those wonderful men in the black and white-striped shirts, but still managed to post its 14 win of the season against 15 losses.

Chris Plazak was the man of the hour as he connected on the second of two free throws with 0:02 left in the game to send the game into overtime.

The Hawks struck right away in the overtime as Malcom X Darrell Space fouled Craig Rawlins on the tip-off. Rawlins plunked in the first free throw of the bonus situation but missed the second. Tim Logan was right there for the rebound and threatened a behind-the-back pass to Rawlins, who barked it off the glass to put Harper at 83-80.

Malcom X pulled within one,

83-82, but the Hawks Brad Miller came back with two free throws. Rawlins connected on two more free throws and Plazak added a bucket to put the game out of reach.

Harper finally got some of the shutes to go in its way in the overtime, making 11 of its free throws to claim its the final 20 minutes of the game.

"We needed a win like that," said Harper coach Roger Bechtold, whose team had lost in overtime to Triton the previous Friday afternoon.

"It's a shame the game was marred by the officials. It was a good basketball game, both teams shot well. I'm just happy we were able to come back. We have to have more mental discipline, we lost our composure a few times and had some crucial technicals called on us."

Malcom X head coach John Wilson was not so kind with his words. "That foul call on the jump ball at the start of the overtime was probably the worst call I've ever seen and I've been associated with basketball for 40 years," said a not too happy Wilson. "That call ruined the whole game around. That was a basketball out there it would have been a betwee ball game without the fouled up officiating."

The Hawks trailed throughout most of the game with fouls killing any momentum they would start to build up. Harper was behind by as many as seven, 44-37 with nine minutes left in the game, but Rawlins hit for two jumpers, Rob Doreny banged in two more buckets and Logan hit on two free throws to make it all at the 17:27 mark. Malcom X went up to five again and it stayed that way until there were about two minutes left in the game. Logan then drilled two jumpers from the top of the key and added two free throws to pull the Hawks back within one 60-59 until Plazak hit on the crucial free throw to go into the extra period and keep Harper alive.

"Now we want to build some momentum into the tournament," said Bechtold. "This will help our attitude, we lost a lot of close games this year. This team is determined. They do not give up."

Logan led all scorers with 26 points. Rawlins, in the final career, ended the night with 24 career and the night with 24. Doreny pumped in 10 points. Plazak chipped in 10. Harper also got some excellent play from Brad Miller, Steve Lettreck and Jeff Martinski.

Weidner scores 39.46

Lady Hawks romp to easy victories

by JOE KUSEK

Last year the team beat you by over 30 points and now you face them without two of your starters. One of them the leading scorer in the state and the other your starting center.

Time to just throw out the basketball and hope for the best, right? Wrong.

Not when you have Val Weidner on your side. The sophomore forward poured in 46 points from all over the floor in leading the Harper women's basketball team to a 74-37 victory over visiting Lake County last Wednesday evening. But Weidner's performance wasn't the only highlight, it was the play of the whole team that pleased coach Tom Teuchner.

"Tonight was a good team effort. They started believing in themselves," said Teuchner. "The whole team climbed back to us so we had two starters out I was concerned, but they played under control and were running the last break right. Our defense is a super job. I think tonight Mary Ann (Larson) arrived in a big way. Linda (Arnott), Debbie (Dicks), Viv Weidner, everyone down the line did a good job."

Larson, pressed into a starting role, responded by controlling the backboards. Larson ripped down 12 rebounds and contributed 10 points an offense.

Teuchner also got some fine play from guards Mary McTigue and Karen DeMoss who ran the offense and set up Weidner for her shots. Both either setting up the Harper fast-break or slowing things down when the situation called for it.

Weidner just didn't gain away for her shots as the hit 20-of-29 field goal attempts and was six-for-six from the free throw line. She also had eight rebounds, seven steals and five assists. But probably the best thing that happened, didn't she survive the whole 40 minutes without getting hurt.

"They were just giving me excellent passes," said Weidner who hit for 39 points the previous Monday. "We were going to lose this game supposedly. But we got our game going and put it all together. We needed this win."

The Hawks trailed much of the game, when Weidner hit on a drive down the key and Larson bagged two free throws to make it 44-31 with 12 minutes in the game. Weidner then took a hand in the next eight Harper points, hitting two lay-up jumpers, throwing a pass to Dicks for a bucket and whopping a pass to McTigue who popped in a 16-footer, making it 55-46 and Lake County never threatened from there.

For the fans, it was time to sit back and light up a good cigar as the women routed Moraine Valley 87-43 Monday night. The Hawks hit Moraine Valley early with a full-court press to open up 24-14 lead after 10 minutes of play.

Again the Harper offense centered around Weidner as she pumped in 22 first-half points, finishing up the night with 39 to lead all scorers.

Harper's Linda Arnott also hit for double figures with 10 points. Kathy Pfander added 12 before going down with an ankle injury. Pfander hopefully will be back when the Hawks face Thurston in sectional play.

"They had the open shot and took it," said assistant coach Mike Hensley. "A game like this gives confidence to the players. We've been working more on defense in practice and it's paying off."

The women take on Thurston tonight at home, at 8 p.m. in a game the women are looking for some revenge.

They will host the NJCAA Sectional Tournament and take on Thurston again Thursday night, at 7 p.m. to hopefully take their first big step toward sectional play.

With Weidner's 85 points in two games, she currently owns the second highest scoring average for Illinois junior colleges and tops the single game scoring record for both the men's and women's team.

WONDERFUL WEIDNER: Harper scoring machine Val Weidner is seen doing what she does best, putting up another two points for the Hawks. Weidner hit for 46 points in two games. In Wednesday night, Harper scored its all-time single-game winning streak in tonight's game vs. Thurston. The game starts at 8 p.m. and is an NCC conference battle. The women started their winning streak by demolishing Moraine Valley, 87-43 at home the past Monday evening. (photo by Lori Lynn Gay)

Senate works on new committees

The student senate created three new committees and pondered a fourth at the senate regular meeting last Tuesday.

A Goals committee, Budget committee, and a Publicity committee were all established as active senate committees. A proposal for an Election committee is awaiting further debate.

The Goals committee will meet to discuss long and short term goals of the senate. The committee will also advise the senate on how proposed goals should be reached.

The Budget Committee is a non-permanent committee that meets in the spring annually to discuss the appropriation of the student activities budget for the coming school year. This spring, Kim Garner of WILM, Karen Tergon from the Program Board, and Student Senate President Mike LaVarney and Student Activities Director Jaane Pankas will have the duties of the Budget committee.

The Publicity committee will serve several functions. A regular senate newsletter will be one primary concern.

Other chores will include the committees acting as a public relations bureau for senate elections, and senate sponsored events. The Publicity committee will also be responsible for gathering student ideas.

A proposal for the establishment of an Election Committee has been postponed for further discussion. This Election Committee would be a permanent fixture on the senate. The committee's primary concern would be the regulation of the senate and student trustee elections.

In other student senate action:

The senate will be exploring ways to possibly re-open the Front Porch snack area in a building lounge. However, Dr. James Perry, vice president of administrative services, has told the senate that the college can not afford a complete re-opening of the area. To do this would ultimately result in price increases in the book store, because book store profit offsets food service loss.

The senate approved a measure to establish a "coffee give-away" service. This service would involve placing a table at a particular area on campus where senators could give-out free coffee and hear the concerns of students first hand. The senate is particularly interested in hearing from night students.

The senate is considering the establishment of an Escort Service to escort night students from campus buildings to the parking lots. The senate will pool students' response to the idea and from there decide on specific action.

Tomchek begins re-election campaign

David Tomchek has announced his candidacy for re-election to the Harper Board of Trustees. Tomchek said he would file his official petition next time in the very near future.

Tomchek, who is employed by the Illinois Educational Association, cited his role in the selection of James McGrath as president of Harper as his major achievement while being on the Board.

"I think I made a significant contribution in the selection of a president that is accessible to everybody's needs to Harper," said Tomchek.

Tomchek said he feels that he helped "pull a lot of loose ends together" as a trustee. Tomchek cited the school's financial status as an example.

"I think we [the board] have a very good grip on our financial concerns," said Tomchek. Tomchek is one of four incumbents whose seats expire at the end of this term. They are: Jan Bone and Brian Barch have joined Tomchek in announcing their bids for re-election. Josh Klausman has yet to make a final decision concerning her running. Petitions for candidacy will begin being accepted on Wednesday.

News Briefs

New Squad car

A new patrol car is now in use by the Public Safety Department. The car, a 1980 Dodge Aspen, was delivered to the college late last month and is replacing an older vehicle which has since been retired from service.

The new car is one of two vehicles the public safety department uses in the department's patrol of the college grounds and for traffic control. When maintenance work is needed on any of the vehicles an outside garage is contracted for repair work.

Candidate Janitor visits

Edward Burke, a Chicago Alderman, who is running for the Democratic nomination for state's attorney will speak to political science classes today. A representative from State Senator Richard Daley's (Burke's opponent) campaign will also be speaking. Persons interested in attending the speaking engagement should call Moby Wazie in the social science division for information and locations of the speeches. The time slots for the speeches has been set at 9-10 a.m., 11:30-11:50, and 12-12:30.

Janitor dies

George Evans, of the Physical Plant, died Tuesday, Feb. 19, of an apparent heart attack. Mr. Evans was employed by Harper since April, 1978. Cards may be sent to either Mrs. Joan Decker or Mr. Mark Evans, daughter and son of Mr. Evans, at 816 Woodstar, Crystal Lake, IL 60014.

Correction

In the last issue of the Harbinger it was reported that William Miller made the statement, "Being a part-timer doesn't make a teacher better or worse, just less convenient." In actuality, the statement was made by Dave Williams, vice president of academic affairs not Miller, Faculty Senate President.

Cafeteria theft hurts everyone in the long run

What earthly good would a heavy duty salad bowl have for anyone?

That is what cafeteria personnel have been trying to figure out for some time now. An increasing number of trays, silverware and bowls have been disappearing from the cafeteria.

The culprits are not totally thoughtless though; they leave trash in place of the missing items. Several members of the cafeteria crew are in charge of cleaning the tables not busing them.

In the long run, no one is "winning" the little game of hide and seek that is being played. The more things that disappear, the more money it takes to replenish the dwindling supply. The result is higher prices for everyone.

It only takes a minimal amount of effort to pick up one's trash, place it in the proper receptacle and slide the tray into the nearby racks. But that seems to be too much effort for the Pepsi Generation to exert.

It seems that the "Clean" attitude inspired by so many ecological campaigns has faded with passing time. It is a shame that we live in a society where before anyone can attempt to clean up corporate waste, start rousing urban renewal campaigns or simply clean up their backyard they have to be reminded to throw away a few scraps of paper.

Letter to the Editor

Concerned student sets music columnist straight

Dear Mr. Simkus:

How can you call yourself a music critic?

Remember your February 18 column? In it you referred to the Electric Light Orchestra as a "new wave" group. You even went so far as to lump the ELO into a category with the Kinks, the Cars, and Cheap Trick.

Now come on!

If you're going to write a music column, Mr. Simkus, I suggest you do your homework. The ELO was born in 1970 from one of England's most important rock groups, the Move. Jeff Lynne, Bev Bevan and Roy Wood, the nucleus of ELO, built the group on the theory of mixing contemporary rock with the instruments and arrangements of classical music.

It escapes me how you could possibly call the Electric Light Orchestra a "new wave" group. It's obvious that you don't know too much about the groups you attempt to critique.

The ELO has given rock groups a unique influence; rock & roll would never have been the same. In 1972 ELO gave us their timeless version of "Roll Over Beethoven." Later came "Showdown," "Can't Get it out of My Head" and "Evil Woman," among many other hits. Jeff Lynne, who writes all the lyrics and all the music for every instrument (including cello and violin), has produced such LPs as "Face the Music" (1971), "A New World's Record"

'77), "Out of the Blue" (1978), and "Discovery" (1979).

The Electric Light Orchestra is not "new," nor is it laddish. ELO is vintage music.

So the next time you discuss "new wave" music, pal, leave ELO out. The Electric Light Orchestra is for those of us who appreciate quality music.

As the man said, "Roll over Beethoven, die these rhythm and blues!"

Respectfully Submitted,
Nancy Karabinos

P.S. And maybe you'd better ask someone who knows what year the Beach Boys got started.

'I don't care' attitude dominates campus activity

From the desk of Mike Simkus Feature Editor

be an issue about the draft, a presidential candidate or which kind of floor was to use, some people can not make up their mind or even wish to think about making up their mind. I seriously wonder if this is from the TV's ME generation. I meet many people, far too many people who say, "I don't care." And yet these are the same people who complain first about the draft coming back, high gas prices, runaway inflation, or any current event problem. And in most cases these people are not registered to vote.

Here at Harper, I see and meet students who do not get involved. I work from 8 pm to midnight inhaling keroseene fumes at O'Hare airport, and yet I still attend our sporting teams or our chorus, or our plays or even our student activities. Unlike fellow students. In all actuality, I would guess there is only 200 people who care about this school. And this is sad, because college could be an unforgettable experience. On the paper staff of the Harbinger there are only 15 people who contribute to the paper; it is not easy to cover everything, with the shortage of staff, but we try. And that is probably the problem of most every club or organization on this campus, a shortage of facts.

I hate to preach, but this attitude amongst many of the students is sickening. Do you lead lives which are filled, or are you the person who needs 30 hours to live in a life than can give you 34? I doubt it.

The Student Senate has tried for responses from students and has had little success. I don't think their methods are at fault. I think it is the students.

This is a community college and I understand this. But, I still can not figure out why so many people retreat into their shell past 3:30 on this campus. It is like a morgue around here at 4 pm.

I surveyed 25 students and asked them what they were doing tonight. Do you know what I heard? NOTHING!!!

Maybe the best thing that could happen to the people on this campus is if their T.V. sets blew up.

And then I'll say, "I DON'T CARE."

Cafe problems

by NORA NORTON

Petty thievery is a common problem in big business. Items such as missing pencils, paper, envelopes, and paper clips add up to a substantial sum. Missing trays, silverware and plastic bowls can also add up to a substantial sum, according to Cliff Wever, Director of Food Service Management at Harper.

"Every time someone walks away with a tray," he said, "it costs money."
"The trays cost $4.50 apiece, the plastic soup bowls cost $3 apiece because the plastic is tough and the silverware costs about six cents apiece."
"If only five trays, each with a plastic bowl and three pieces of silverware, were taken from the cafeteria every day during the school term (approximately 60 days) and not returned, the cost of replacement would amount to close to $200.
However, that does not include other items in the cafeteria which Wever said are adding to the expense of operating the cafeteria.

Students walk away with 2 inches of napkins and waste a lot of condiments," he added. "Friday is the smallest day for customers," said Wever, "yet we use the most condiments on Friday."

In addition to the missing utensils and food items there is a problem of trash disposal: students are simply not clearing the tables after they eat dinner.

"About two or three times a year little steel notices are placed on the tables asking the students to clear away their litter," he said, "but the problem is getting worse."
"We do have four or five full-time people which should be more than adequate" but busing isn't part of their job. Costs keep going up and unless everyone does his/her share, "prices will go up tremendously," said Wever.

Most eligible

by KARIN J. JOHNSON

Gertrude Kerbis, Architectural Technology professor at Harper and mother of three, recently was named one of the ten most eligible women in Chicago by the Chicago Tribune.

"It was just an entertainment idea," said Kerbis. "It was based on women who were financially independent and well-established in their field."
All the women on the list are successful in their field and have done significant work in their field of expertise.

"It didn't affect my life. I wasn't really interested. It was just a fun kind of thing," Kerbis said.

She did get phone calls and letters. "The responses were funny," said Ms. Kerbis. "I did get a proposal in one letter. I laughed. It was all for fun."

Kerbis has been teaching full time at Harper for ten years. Joe Yohanan, head of her department and Meyer Rudolph, also of the department, both attended Harvard with Ms. Kerbis. Yohanan asked her to join them in the department.

"It's an excellent department and there's a very good response from the students in the field of architecture. They go on to do a lot of advanced work," said Kerbis.

She previously taught at University of Illinois at Circle and Washington University in St. Louis, Missouri.

Her interest in architecture came while attending the University of Wisconsin where she was studying Liberal Arts. Frank Lloyd Wright's home and studio were near the campus. Kerbis visited the estate and was impressed by his work.

"I decided it was an interesting field," she said. "It combines scientific and rational studies with aesthetic and artistic aspects of life."

Ms. Kerbis is the president of the Chicago Chapter of the American Institute of Architecture.

"I'm a workaholic," she said. "I'm at Harper all day on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, always working."

Some of the buildings she has designed are the Seven Components Building at O'Hare, the Shaker Public Library and The Air Force Academy Dining Hall in Colorado Springs.

Ms. Kerbis has given talks at Ball State University in Indiana and at the University of New Mexico.

Harper heads to tourney

The Harper Hawks, after a season ending 76-73 victory over Illinois Valley, head into the NJCAA Sectional Tourney this Friday at Concordia River-Forest.

The Hawks, 2-4 in NAC play and 18-12 overall, will face the winner of the Wright-Oakton game, which will be played on Thursday night. Triton, which finished in a tie with Joblet for the NAC title at 12-2, will play the winner of Malcolm X-Triton in the other quarter final game. The winners of the semi-finals will then meet in the championship game Saturday night at 7:30 p.m.

Harper basketball coach Harper Eberhold doesn't think the two-week lay-off between games will hurt his team in the tournament. "I think it's going to be helpful because we've had injuries," said Eberhold, citing Chris Pizsak, a ankle-sprain, Jeff Martiniak (foot-problems), and guard Tim Logans (groin-injury) as Harper's walking wounded.

EASY DOES IT. Harper's Marty McTigue (10) puts in one of her two free throws in the Hawks' 76-73 victory over visiting Triton. Getting ready for the rebound is Marty Ann Larson. The winners will face Triton again this Thursday in the sectional tournament at Harper. The game will begin at 7:30 p.m., at Bidg. M. (photo by Scott Arsenault)

Country and western current primer

This past week I have been hecky-tonking and boot 'n' hollering to my favorite country and western albums. I spoke with one of the biggest authorities of country music, and that person is Bob Moeller. Bob has one of the best country record collections that I have ever seen. He has also seen many fine country acts and knows a couple of people personally.

Bob said this about country music: "People should try to give country music a good listen, before they write it off." Bob, like myself, listens to country, rock 'n' roll, jazz and blues. We both feel that too many people are not broad-minded when it comes to music.

The following is a list that exists only to give the reader a nice list of popular country, country, rock 'n' roll, jazz and blues. We both feel that too many people are not broad-minded when it comes to music.

Willie Nelson Redd Foxx
Krusenauer by Willie Nelson. Nelson sings all or most of the classic country songs that Krusenauer has written. Songs like, "Why Me?", "Me and

Moods for Moderns

by MIKE SINKLES

Hobby, Melrose." "Help Me Make It Through the Night," all of which are done in Willie's soft melodic voice. We recommend this list for the times that you want to relax in front of a nice fire and watch the flames dance along a log.

Just look like Joe: Mac Hardy and Joe Stimpney A honky-tonk album. If there ever was one. "Just Good the Boys," "Teh I Am! Here, He Better Get Home," "When It Comes to Congress We Just Can't Say No." All of which are some fine examples of honky-tonk country music. The songs, typical of country people, are about beer drinking, cheating and women are done with that honky-tonk piano and hot steel guitar.

Portrait by Don Williams. Don has another one of those melodic voices. He is gifted as the way he can pull at your heartstrings. Bob added, "This sounds weird, but, the best definition I can give is pretty."

My Very Special Guests by George Jones George is probably one person who is for the very hard country fan. George's special guests are Waylon Jennings, James Taylor, Emmylou Harris, Linda Ronstadt, Tammy Wynette, Willie Nelson.

Johnny Paycheck and Elvis Costello. Here we are, with Emmylou, is the best combination of male and female country artists. Bob said, "I would buy this album just for that song. Let alone any other of the songs. Jones is one of my favorites."

What Goes Around Comes Around by Waylon Jennings Waylon is the premier person of the new wave of country music. Typical: Waylon, hard core country, Waylon's humor and will set us down to earth. It is nice to see something popular that is so American. A typical Waylon statement is seen on the back cover: Let it rain. "Thanks to Foxy Joe for hunky guitar and back alley harmonica."

Too Hot To Change, by Jerry Jeff Walker. Walker is as close to a cowboy as you can get in the 20th century. Walker has a voice that has a rough edge that really captures the essence of country music. Songs like, "Too Old To Change," "Old Nashville Cowboy," and a new version of "I Am Living Like This." That is a good version as the one done by Waylon. This is worth the $5.00 it costs.

A Hearty Old Nail by  Hoyt Axton. Hoyt was better known as the songwriter of "Joy to the World" or "Beaver, Been to Spain." That Three Log Side had success with. This is proof that Axton's talent is finally surfacing as a singer of his own material.

Everybody's Got A Family by Johnny Paycheck. This guy is a living legend. He gained popularity with his "Take This Job and Shove It" and "Me and the I.R.S." another album packed with up tempo spirited country tunes. Paycheck is helped by the best country musicians in the business today. Bob added, "The music industry on this album is very bad."

Talents will lead to the intellectual sphere

"I am currently following a course of study in engineering. Does my chart indicate this would be a good choice? What would be acceptable alternatives?"

One outstanding feature in your chart which is noticeable right away even by non-astrologers, is that the majority of planets are in the western half of the chart. All that remains is the Moon, isolated by itself, directly opposite of the other planets. This represents the type of person who is basically reactive to life's circumstances and opportunities, rather than one who seeks to directly control them through pure initiative. This also symbolizes that you are concerned and motivated by the actions and reactions of others. Yet, with your Aquarian Moon, singled out and strong in the first house, you should be highly in tune with your own emotional needs and desires for independence, equality and individuality. There is a deep humanitarian streak within you, and this may have to be applied throughout your daily life in order for you to feel personal satisfaction.

Your talents should lead you toward the intellectual sphere, for this is how you naturally perceive life. You are practical, organized and analytical. You probably react to life's everyday experiences thoughtfully, working things out through logic and rational application of ideas. At times, you may find yourself so bogged down with the details of an issue, that you may have difficulty making decisions. Being a perfectionist isn't easy. How do all of these traits fit in with the qualifications required for engineering? Well, you've got the patience, perfectionism, creativity and detail-oriented mind. Also, you are the best working as an employee, rather than being in charge of something yourself. If you can seriously apply yourself to grasp the mathematical theories and technical knowledge necessary, I'm sure you could do well in this field, but it may not bring you the most satisfaction. As I evaluated the vocational indicators in your chart, the strongest impressions that came to me were the fields of psychology, psychiatry or sociological work, where you would be dealing with people in a logical fashion. "You may not realize it, but others see you as an emotionally responsive person, and can be made to feel very comfortable in your presence." You could also know how to manipulate information to cleverly persuade a judge or jury.

In pursuit of a career, you will probably have some personal tensions and difficulties to work out as your chart indicates this as a stressful area, particularly at this time. It may seem as if though someone in your life has been putting certain pressures on you in relation to this, creating for you feelings of extreme restlessness and a need to just "be yourself". Soon, things will be looking brighter. This February's eclipse, which symbolically contacted your chart, is a sure indication of new beginnings, and by the end of the summer your goals may completely turn around and head in a different direction! Good Luck.

Boomtown Rats each week day

We all hate Mondays, but few of us express our aversion quite like Bob Geldof and his band, "The Boomtown Rats." The Rats have surfaced with their third LP entitled "The Fine Art of Surfacing." On the album is their first world wide hit single "I Don't Like Mondays," the controversial song based on the tragic story of a schoolgirl opening fire and shooting several schoolmates in Texas one Monday morning, blaming the whole incident on her spite for that day of the week. The tune opens with a precise, sweeping piano and is backed with a field of violins, quite an ironic contrast to the violent tragedy of the songs content. The paranoic delusions run through a couple other numbers also. "Having my Picture Taken" and "Someone's Looking At You." These perceptions are not uncommon for the dynamic, often coarse lead singer-songwriter Bob Geldof (known as Modest Bob by the British press) who has rought some heat in the past for some of his public statements which and his recent company and the public to take him and the Rats something less than seriously.

settled the Rats successfully took it out with some strong pop hits. The Rats saw the trend punk started, that is, dumping on the establishment, has become a standard statement so many of today's bands paradoxically creating their own a n i n b l i a h - ment. Geldof takes a hardline view of all this and is the kind of stuff he and the Rats like to spit out at us. They digy pignobling. So on "Surfacing" we get a fine album full of the Rats good stuff, energetic pop intest of a friend turned clevygram and also contains some fun show pop show wup hurried up chorus, straight from Motown. Another toe tapper, "Keep It Up" is sharply cynical view of a woman's intentions. Between tracks the Rats keep it moving with their satirical falsetto quips they've become notorious for.

However, the Rats are serious about making their music; their risk-all exuberance evidences that, but Geldof's parodying sarcasm is among the best of jabbing typical pop music images. He stands in the same line with Elvis Costello and Ian Dury. We really can't take the Boomtown Rats too seriously by appearances but the aesthetic theories do deserve some attention. The Rats, like the Clash have found themselves in that contemporary music void that advertising men know an "New Wave" although they may even escape categorization in that considered area. This isn't just another bunch of guys in skinny ties and leather pants, are are the true slash and burn punk spirit. After the passing fashion of punk had run its brief course and the dust had but as I said, energy in a primary melody for these guys. The rubberiest best of Simon Crow's drums and the whaling riffs of Gerry Roberts and Gerry Clark's guitar lead really bustling through "Nice N' Sleaz", a number that leaves Geldof question the religious

So, when we put the excessive spirit of the Boomtown Rats and the lyrically volatile Geldof together, it seems easy to dismiss the neuroticisms of dissemblance. But remember don't take the Rats too seriously, their narcissism in part of their nature. They may not be fine art but it is fine rock and roll. Catch the Boomtown Rats' animated, energetic performance next month at the Hivern Theatre.

Buzzcocks' tension

If by chance you haven't heard the music of the "Buzzcocks" you don't know what you are missing. I am sure you are thinking to yourself you would never listen to a group named the "Buzzcocks," but their unique blend of punk rock pop makes them stand out among the typical pop bands. The band was formed in 1976 by Pete Shelley and Howard Devoto. The band had a big hit in England called "Boredom" that initially got them noticed. After that Howard Devoto left the group, and Pete Shelley took charge of the band. Their last American release was "Singles Going Slightly" a collection of their singles they have released Almost like a "Buzzcocks" greatest hits album. Although it won a great album, it did not get much airplay. Maybe that will change. Their new album is called "A Different Kind of Tension" and it is a strong follow up to the singles going slightly album. The album cover is a series of geometric shapes with a picture of the group in shadow. It is very much suggestive of modern art. It reminds me of the Devo import album cover. And the music is modern, from "you say you don't love me" a powerful pop love song, that would even pass for a hit on WLS will maybe not to the punk bent of "Mad Mid Judy" this album keeps up a very high energy level. The song, "A Different Kind of Tension" is a fine blend of guitar and keyboard that is different from the typical Buzzcocks' music. "I believe" is a power pop song in which Shelley states his belief that there is no love in this world any more and he would be states it! (6 times).

All in all, I hope the Buzzcocks get a little more airplay, they do have songs that could be potential hits, and remember you heard about them here, in the Harbinger, first.

One joke film C.K.

"Being There" is a film that contains a single joke bringing many apparent possibilities, what if a person was never exposed to the outside world and the only way to obtain knowledge is through television?

Chance (Peter Sellers) is this person. Taken in when he was five by an adoptive father, Chance has never been outside other than working in the garden. When his adoptive father dies, he is forced to take on the outside world. Washington D.C. by himself.

The screenplay, based on Koninski's novel, offers the joke to divert from the whole concept of this satire. But, the script never goes overboard with its conceit. Koninski believes that it makes the viewer, in Chance's situation, an innocent child. Unlike "Network," which uses a frenzied approach toward v. "Being There" is a work of control.

Chance's character is an acting task which is superbly brought off by Peter Sellers. It is rarely to see a performance that proudly stands next to other distinguished comic performances. He's proved it before in the innately inspired fun in "Dr. Strangelove."

This darkly humorous satire is kept in meticulous detail. The most behind this is Hal Ashby. Ashby has applied this deftness in other movies like "The Last Detail," "Shampoo," and "Coring Home." He is able to make us believe we are seeing Washington D.C. for the first time. The way Ashby presents the city is refreshing. There is one particular shot that describes this beauty, a low angle shot of Chance walking up the median strip on the highway in the foreground with the Capitol Building in the background lighted by Einar Denstad's score.

To say that "Being There" works as a satire is an understatement. This is a masterpiece by Koninski. Ashby and Sellers.

Gymnasts headed for Baltimore

by JOE KUSLIK

"Hello... Atlanta!" This is Harper College. We would like to purchase six tickets to Baltimore for March 7.

For a short while it looked like this phone call would not take place, but only for a short while.

Training after the first two events, the Harper women's gymnastics team went 1-0 on the balance beam and won the floor exercises to win the NACAA Regional meet and advance to nationals as a team this coming March 7 in Baltimore.

Winning their way to Baltimore will be Kathy Blake, Barb Polvere, Mary Beth Black, Cindy Curtis, Sandy Colglazier, and coach Renee Zeltner.

Harper won the team title with a score of 69.75. Triton was second with 69 and DuPage placed third with 69.40.

"I really wasn't worried as our strongest events all year have been beam and floor," said coach Renee Zeltner who took over the team this year. Last year the team finished in the rest of the top 10 and this year the team won it all.

Andy Curtis performed well in the vault. He had surprised everyone with a first. This is the first time ever that Harper has beaten Triton at the Regional meet.

Curtis' surprise performance came in the floor exercise. Curtis earned a score of 7.75 on her floor exercise routine to tie for first place with her best mark of the season. Teammate Mary Beth Black tied for third with a score of 7.00 to give Harper the points it needed to wrap up the team title. Kathy Blake was right behind with a mark of 7.00 and Barb Polvere hit a 7.00.

The balance beam proved to be a second home for the Hawks as Black captured the first place medal and Blake took home the second place piece of hardware.

Black impressed the judges enough for a score of 8.00 to easily win the team title. Black, who only started competing in the all-around a couple of weeks ago, placed second with a 7.10. Polvere is also competing in the all-around for Harper but a score of 4.60.

The first event gave Harper its biggest scare of the afternoon as Polvere, on her second vaulting attempt, lost her footing and injured her knee in a fall. She managed a score of 7.75 and came back later in the meet to finish the events. Sandy Colglazier matched Polvere's score of 4.60 and Blake hit a 5.5.

Colglazier in the following event grabbed a second on the uneven-parallel bars with a back flip dismount. It got a score of 7.4 from the judges. Polvere nailed down a score of

Grapplers take second at IAC

by WAYNE RENDEAU

How fast things happen in sports. It was just a couple weeks ago when Norm Lovelace thought his chances of becoming conference champion were none and slim, in that order.

But suddenly, Lovelace's team got better, physically, that is. No, they weren't out of shape, it's just that bodies of Hawk wrestlers had this annoying habit of getting injured during the season.

But as with all teams of championship caliber, they found a way to be healthy enough for the big meet. The bigger the Hawks was the confidence title match last Feb. 10, and they responded in the style champions are expected to qualify, to victory.

National competition will be held in Worthington, Minn. from March 5-6th.

Mike Rief was a national title last season with the Hawks and Lovelace feels that he has a couple wrestlers who also have a good shot at winning at their weight divisions in this year's meet.

"I believe Duane Weber and Gary Adams can do it, sure," he said matter-of-factly. "Look, all of these guys work extremely hard. Some of them have won weight divisions or have placed well in divisions that are 10 pounds or more over their own weight. They're not afraid of anybody."

Lovelace glanced around the mat and the wrestlers and continued, "I think... well I don't know, I think that we're in better shape than most teams around here. Take the conference meet, for example. We were turning those guys out when the final period came around. We had the endurance when you need it the most - the third period.

"And that's the trick to payche a guy out and to last longer than he can. Even if you're just an intrad, it doesn't matter as long as the other guy is payched into believing you are!"

"We've won a lot of matches on endurance alone. That's one benefit of all the work those boys have put in."

Lovelace said his goodbyes, blew his whistle, and began yet another 1-hour session of practice. Long, hard practice, but hardly a break in between.

"Come on, you guys," he demanded, his voice sounding hoarse from weeks of continuous advice, teaching, and shouting as ringmaster of his Hawk Team.

farer our heavy-weight division and our 190-pound categories," he said loudly.

Lovelace went on to speculate that "Sean (Matti) could've been the wrestler that won the heavy-weight division." He also pointed out that DuPage wrestler captured a third place spot in the 190-pound division.

"We had Ed (Broderick) in there," he explained, "but two days before the meet he walked in and told me that he quit. No reason, nothing... I couldn't believe it. We lost points because DuPage wrestler took third in his place."

Lovelace gave credit to DuPage, however, for their victory. "When you've good, breaks fall your way," he said. "When you're prepared, luck turns into opportunity, and they (DuPage) made it happen."

Women's basketball carries big win streak into tourney

by JOE KUSLIK

If the Harper women's basketball team can win with two of its starters out and its Hawks lead had the game, what will happen when they play that team again at full strength?

Just how valuable is Val Wedder in the Hawks' Wall when Wedder went down with an ankle injury late in the first half Harper led 30-20 and she accumulated 23 of the Hawks' first half points.

When she re-entered the lineup, the Hawks' lead had expanded to seven points with 14 minutes left on the clock. With Harper's scoring threat showed down, Thornton kept chipping away at the lead and were trailing 44-33 when Wedder fouled out. Thornton knotted the score at all with a minute left in the game. But Harper's Debbie from way out, and Mary McQuigle hit both ends of a one-and-one situation as Harper held on to win 72-70 on Thornton last Monday night.

The women will face the name team this Thursday night when they host the NACAA Sectionals with games starting at 7:30 p.m.

Wedder, in Harper's second consecutive win, had just an average night, hitting exactly 50 percent of her shots accounting for one-half of the Hawks' point total with 38, finishing out seven assists and having three steals.

When the women take the court against Thornton for the third time this season, they will have had their second leading scorer in Kathy Flaxberger, who is coming off an ankle injury and starting center Lou Ann Kline, who has been sidelined with a back ailment.

"This was a good team effort," said coach Tom Tenbrunsel, whose team takes on Kishwaukee tonight in a tune-up before sectional play. Wedder worked the ball around and showed more patience on offense.

"We played a very good first half but our offense died for a while when Val got hurt. Mary Ann (Larson) did a good job blocking out on the boards. Tonight, Mary McQuigle also did a good job on defense tonight."

McQuigle, Harper's freshman point guard, spent much of the night either bouncing off people on defense or diving for loose balls for the Hawks. Even though collecting enough bumps and bruises for a year, she managed to hand out seven assists, break the Thornton full-court press and direct the Harper offense.

Meeting

There will be a women's track meeting Monday, March 3 at 1:30 p.m. The meeting will take place in Bldg. M in the main gym. All women who are interested in participating on the track team are urged to attend, if one cannot attend the meeting, have your name and number on a card to coach Renee Zeltner or call ext. 667.

Watershed reps selected

Shirley Munson and Jan Bone have been appointed to represent the Board of Trustees on the committee on the Upper Salt Creek Watershed Project.

This project involves the building of a large reservoir on back corner of the campus.

In addition to being appointed to this committee, Mrs. Bone is also serving on the committee to select an outstanding faculty member. This faculty member will be presented at the graduation ceremony.

Also at the February 11 meeting, it was reported that recruitment projects are going well. Letters are being sent to high school seniors in the area and open houses for these students and their families are being planned. The recent display at Sandhurst and Woodfield Shopping Malls also helped. It is apparent that community interest in Harper is all scaffolding.

Pror in the next Board of Trustees meeting called for an hour long "master plan" for open discussion of various issues.

Mike Larway, who has taken over the duties of president of Student Senate since the resignation of Mark Comeaux, was formally introduced to the Board as president.

Meeting recap

Trustee election petition filing

Last Thursday was the first day of petition filing for the April 12 Board of Trustees election.

Janet W. Bone and Brian Barch, both incumbents were the first candidates to file petitions. Mrs. Bone, who lives at 313 N. Morris Drive in Palatine, has been on the Board of Trustees since April 1977. Barch, of 618 North Forest, Arlington Heights, has been a board member since July 1979 when he was appointed to fill the vacancy of Natalie Weber who moved from the district.

Both Bone and Barch filed for three year seats. There are 13 three year seats up for election and 11 one year seat. Incumbent David Tomczek who has announced his candidacy for re-election had not filed as of last Thursday. The final day to file petitions is Friday, March 21.

Board considers perimeter use

The village of Palatine wants the Harper College Board of Trustees to consider letting the village use college roads and parking lots for access to the Salt Creek reservoir.

The reservoir will be built by the northeast corner of Algonquin and Quentin Roads. It will cover 16 acres. The board gave the Metropolitan Sanitary District permission to build the reservoir at a meeting last August.

At a meeting on Thursday, February 28, various officials from Palatine asked the board to consider letting the village have access to Harper's perimeter road and areas in parking lots 11 and 12 so that the area could be used as a recreation center. If permission is not granted, then the reservoir will be used only for flood control. Mayor Buss of Palatine requested that the board make its decision soon so that the village would not lose out on a considerable amount of money needed for the project.

The board asked questions of Buss and of Fred Hall, a Park District.

A board member asked Hall about liability. Hall said that Harper could be added as a surety policy so that Harper would have no liability. At the meeting ended, Trustee George Dauber said that he wanted that in writing.

Trustee Ray Mills asked about policing, saying he feared gangs coming in and taking over the land which should be for recreation. It was pointed out to Mills that the recreational center would be easily visible from the roadside. Mayor Buss said that the Palatine Police Department would police the area.

Trustee Jan Bone asked about a possible fee differential for the use of the recreational area between Palatine villagers and non Palatine villagers. Hall said that there would be fee differentials only if the activity taking place at the lake was being sponsored as a park district program.

Mills asked if District 512 residents from such relatively far-away places such as Wheeling and Carpentersville might not resent having Harper give an assessment to the Palatine Park District. Hall said that persons from those areas already take advantage of free programs offered by the Palatine Park District.

Several asked why the park district had to use Harper parking lots, and why couldn't the park district just build parking lots on the east side of Quentin. A Schaumburg official attending the meeting said that the area east of Quentin had already been zoned for the building of condominiums. He also said that the land on which the reservoir will stand had already been zoned for condominiums, and that that land had had to be given up by the developer of the condominiums.

repairs on the pool, however, are progressing faster than those on the courts. Last week the pool was cleaned and this week Misc hopes to install new light fixtures in the pool. After this is done, the pool will be filled and tested for leaks. (Harberger file photo)

IT'S DIFFICULT that the racquetball courts will be ready for the second eight weeks of the semester," said Don Matic, in charge of construction of Bldg. M. He said repairs on the courts have not been completed and present conditions are unacceptable.

Budget panel ponders funds

The budget committee has come up with highlights for next year's Student Activities Budget. An approximate guess to the final amount of the budget is speculated to be about $200 over the cost recommended by the Student Activities Office. Among speculated funds are an increase of $60 to student development.

hide at a new van costs for sign printing. Student Senate secretary pay increase possibility of sending more students to the Political Science Club's trip to the Model United Nations increased travel. In other Student Senate action.

The Communications Committee has contacted the library to have a copy of the Student Senate Constitution placed in the library along with meeting minutes and agendas of meetings. President Mike Larway questioned the Senate about whether Senator Dale Markay is in good standing with the Senate. Markay is on leave of absence. The senate decided to change the number of a good standing majority from six out of ten senators to five out of nine senators. Fred Waters reported that the Operating Room Technicians Club has asked the student activities office for funds. The Senate, which is required to vote on such appropriation measures, agreed to fund the club with $200.

Ban placed on night jogging

A campus wide publicity campaign has been launched to alert students and community residents to the dangers of after dark jogging. A ban has been placed on dark to dawn jogging along all campus perimeter roads and parking lots. The Public Safety Department recommended the ban which was approved by James McIrath, college president. Students and community members who jog on campus are asked to do so during daylight hours only, wear brightly colored clothes and avoid the right of way to motorists.

Editorial

Senate begins to show some signs of life

It looks as if the Student Senate "body" isn't ready for burial yet.

A noticeable effort to reach students and set the wheels of government turning again has been made by the Senate recently.

One of the efforts is a "coffee give-away" service. While it is a relatively simple idea and requires a minimal amount of work, it may prove to be the most effective way to reach students. A table is placed at a specific location on campus and manned by a senator. The results are twofold: students can get a warming cup of coffee for nothing and Senate can learn of student concerns and ideas first hand.

Perhaps even more important than this is the fact that Senate is finally exploring several areas that will directly benefit students in their daily campus activity.

Although the reopening of the snack area in A Bldg. lounge is doubtful (a reopening could result in rising prices in the bookstore in order to offset food service loss), Senate is working on alternate plans to reopen.

The Senate also seems to be showing some growing concern for night students. The establishment of an escort service to bring students to their cars from campus buildings is finally getting serious attention from the Senate. The idea was kicked around quite some time ago but nothing ever got done. Now, at least, Senate is gathering student opinion on the matter.

Minutes of Senate meetings and general information sheets have also been posted outside the Senate office. Although people are not exactly flocking into the area to read the sheets, it is an effort to inform students that something is getting done.

Three new committees were also established within the Senate. A goals committee, to establish goals of the Senate and offer advice on how to reach these goals was formed. The annual budget committee has been reestablished to allocate funds for the next academic year, and a publicity committee whose main duties include gathering student ideas and issuing a regular Senate newsletter was organized. The committee will also serve as a "public relations" board to promote Senate elections and Senate sponsored activities.

All of these ideas are well and good but will they actually be acted upon? The true test of the "new establishmentment" will be to keep the momentum it is building now going. More students are beginning to notice that a Student Senate does actually exist on the Harper campus not just in the handbook.

While the Senate may not yet be alive and kicking, it is at least showing signs that it is breathing.

Students should assign standards of good teachers

From the desk of Wendy Winkelhake Editor-in-chief

The "quizzing" principle should be followed by teachers as much as possible. This theory lets the teacher question the student on material and "force" the student to really think about the material. This lets the teacher know just where students are having the most trouble and concentrate in these areas.

Students will also be more willing to work for a class that they really enjoy rather than just showing up.

The difference between a "good" and a "bad" class is not only the academic aspect of the classroom but also the camaraderie that develops between instructor and students.

New machine can help the deaf

by KARIN J. JOHNSON

Picking up the phone and calling a friend probably comes natural to most people, or ordering pizza late at night so it'll be ready when they arrive.

But for the deaf, these conveniences don't come as easy. The telephone is an instrument they seldom, if ever, use unless it's a teletype machine (TTY). But these machines are not a commodity to the deaf.

But that should change. At least that's a dream. Chris Hunter, coordinator of the Hearing Impaired Program at Harper, has. In the future, he hopes that many places will own these machines such as department stores, movie theaters and all hospitals.

As it stands now, only a few hospitals have them. For emergency situations, this is aggravating. In an emergency, the deaf have to walk to a neighbor for help, writing everything they want to say. It takes precious time and can be even harder if the person is upset.

Recently, the state of Illinois has purchased 144 TTY machines. Every county sheriff's office will have one soon. But for now whenever a deaf person wants to get a contractor estimate or to find an interpreter decelerator, they have to visit each place and do a lot of writing.

Using the phone isn't the only frustrating thing standing in the way of leading a normal life. The way people see and treat them is annoying, even at Harper.

Some people think that the deaf are stupid or incompetent. Ginny Parker, a student, says she doesn't look down upon the deaf "but a lot of people I know think they're inferior because of their handicap. This makes me sad because I know they're no different."

Deaf students are very similar to hearing students. All they need is an interpreter. Most of the deaf students at Harper can read lips, and some can speak. "When I find out a person is deaf after starting a conversation with them, I get nervous. But only until I know what I'm doing. I try to speak clearer, if they can't read lips. Sometimes I find myself talking louder, as if that really helps."

Hunter knows of a deaf skater, David Michowski, who conversed with them. I got nervous. But only until I know what I'm doing. I try to speak clearer, if they can't read lips. Sometimes I find myself talking louder, as if that really helps."

if he can't get his idea across. Since coming to Harper five years ago, Hunter feels very comfortable with the people and has a job. He tutors and counsels the deaf students and teaches a sign language class to hearing students.

One of the interpreters, who interprets a three-hour class, says she learns while interpreting. She has taken some of the classes, but still learns more. During her three-hour class, there are two interpreters. One takes notes during the first half of class, then after the break, the two switch roles; one takes notes while the other does the interpreting. President of the Illinois Association of the Deaf, Hunter and the other members are making it possible to inform everyone that deaf people are like us. The major problem with the deaf is the language barrier. Hunter thinks the deaf are behind in the hearing world, in the knowledge of what is happening. But now schools are teaching in early childhood - teaching them to read lips and understand the hearing people. The Association's goal is to publish deaf awareness, and to educate people on how to deal with the deaf.

"People get nervous, cold, have strange attitudes when they find out they're talking to the deaf. But they are friendly, and smile a lot," said Hunter. "Most people have met a deaf person and can generally handle the situation."

And the situation is getting better. "People are softening up toward the deaf," Hunter said. There are new laws and new jobs. Use of the laws is Law 564. It's a Federal Law that requires any institution that receives federal funds to make the institution barrier free. That means to equip it with ramps for people in wheel chairs or to have interpreters for the deaf. Deafness means the inability to hear. It doesn't mean the inability to think.

Draft dodger history

(CPS) - If Congress endorses President Carter's Jan. 22 proposal to begin military registration, it will be the Selective Service System's first stirring since 1976. But it will not be the first time registration has been brought back from the grave. The U.S. has employed various kinds of conscription systems periodically for over a hundred years. A brief history, as sketched from the published work of Harvard University Professor Michael Perman.

The nation's first draft law, enacted during the Civil War, was easiest for the moneyed classes to avoid. The law allowed draftees to hire substitutes, and to buy exemptions for $300. Thus the war, according to a popular saying of the day, was fought "with rich men's money and poor men's blood."

The law moreover was inefficient. Of the 300,000 men called up in 1862, nine per cent paid substitutes, 14 per cent paid the deferment fee, and a whopping 70 per cent deserted to medical and other exemptions. Only three per cent of the draftees were formally inducted.

Peace ended the draft, which was not reinstated until World War I. It was considerably more efficient the second time. Draftees accounted for the majority of American soldiers for the first time in American history.

Around 145,000 college students served instead in the Student Army Training Corps during the Great War. Almost half the draftees claimed physical or occupational exemption.

Others protested more directly. Numerous anti-draft marches on Washington ended with the jailing of the march leaders. Various unions - notably Industrial Workers of the World - organized resistance and were nearly destroyed as a result. Charles Schenck, an officer of the then-formidable Socialist Party, was arrested for merely circulating a petition arguing the draft violated constitutional articles against involuntary servitude. His case ended with Supreme Court Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes' historic ruling that limited freedom of speech in times of national emergency.

In all, the War Department listed 225,000 military resisters ten years after the Treaty of Versailles was signed.

The draft ended with the war, and remained inactive until 1940 when the U.S. began its first peacetime conscription program.

The draft expired in 1947, but the Truman administration surmised that volunteer rates would be too low to sustain Cold War military policy, and successfully sponsored another law which, with certain modifications, remains in force today. But the nation's second peacetime draft did excite protest. Resistance was laid enough to force a liberalized deferment system.

Indeed, the deferment system was so discretionary that a disproportionate share of the 1.5 million men drafted into the Korean War were from working class families.

The pattern continued through the Vietnam War, when draft resistance hit its peak. Some studies suggest as many as 256,000 men illegally failed to register, while another 300,000 either refused induction or emigrated to avoid induction.

Resistance was so broad that by the early 70's the military system was under attack by a large proportion of the young men who were supposed to staff it. In 1971, President Nixon ended all physical exams and infectious registration was suspended on April 1, 1973, and the Selective Service System was officially put on standby status in January, 1975.

Draft anxiety?

by MIKE SHINKUS

For those students who have been upset with all of the talk of a new registration for the draft, can breathe a sigh of relief. After talking with Col. Jim Strachen, the Harbinger has learned something that all of the staff was surprised to find out and something that the students who were being the ends of their fingers to let the quick will be glad to hear. The U.S. Army is against the draft! Strachen said, "The Army's official position is opposition to any form of military conscription. We feel that as an issue that Congress must decide upon through the people. We would like to have an all volunteer Army in this way we will have people who want to be in the Army."

some areas of the country recruitment is far below levels of volunteers that are needed. For example, Milwaukee is meeting only 80 percent of that objective. The Chicago area is meeting and exceeding its objective at times their objectives."

"Probably the best way for us to improve recruitments is through advertising our latest incentives are educational opportunities and Army reserve opportunity. We feel this is the best way to encourage people to serve in the military."

With the recent crash in Afghanistan and Iraq the Harbinger also asked if recruitment has increased 73%, if they sign up today it has not been from the International crisis. It has been because they have always thought about serving in the Armed Forces. And if there were people who fell the crisis is the reason for enlistment they are not told me."

The 60 day question was put to him then, see the U.S. Armed Forces meeting their quotas? "Currently the Army is meeting 97 percent of their quota. But, in

by Mike Simkins

Hey guys, did you know we have a sweetheart on our Harper campus who will be in the Miss III beauty pageant? In case you must know what her vital statistics are she has a model's figure with dimensional 36-26-33, beautiful eyes, single, blonde hair and one of the best smiles in our state. Her name is Karen Ann Kremetz.

If Karen Ann wins, she will receive $1,000 in cash and prizes. And much better yet, she will get a chance at Miss U.S.A. And then ultimately, Miss Universe.

Karen said: "I have been in pageants since I was 16. I was in Miss III Teen Pageant and the Paddock Publications Junior Miss. In the Miss III I was a finalist."

"I first became involved in pageants because I wanted to help my mother, unlike most contestant parents, did not push me. She, in fact, did not want me to get involved in pageants. But after the first pageant I met so many people, had so much fun and it was a chance to get away from it all," Karen revealed.

In TV movies, the typical picture in one of beauty but when girls Karen responded, "That is far from the truth. As a matter of fact, everyone I have gone to a pageant it has been so nice you don't want it to end." In case you're girlfriend happens to be peering over your shoulder right now and wonders what you are reading, tell her this. "Next year you should try the Miss III Beauty Pageant. You qualify, if you're between the ages of 18-28, you live in or go to school in III, and you're single." With the last word let your voice drop down to a whisper.

Karen said, "I've read many articles about beauty pageants. They said, 'If the same girls were in another pageant a different girl would win over time.' That explains why my scorecard reads differently after every Miss America contest."

Karen's hobbies are cooking and she also does creative accounting precisely. And eventually hopes to be an accountant or model. She also works at K-Mart in Schaumburg. Karen is a Fremd High School graduate.

The pageant will be televised on WGN. So that St. Patty's Day tune in on Ch. 9 at 7:30, and watch Karen become Miss III. And if you guys have not talked to her by then you might as well forget it. She will probably have a long waiting list after the pageant.

Freshmen want money

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS)—The Class of 1981—this year's college freshmen—is more interested in making money than prior classes, the annual U.C.A. American Council on Education survey has found. U.C.A.'s Alexander Adin, who conducted the survey, concluded that freshmen are more materialistic because 60 percent of the 1969 students questioned said, "being very well-off financially" was one of their most important goals. Sixty percent of the Class of 1981 rated the material goal as "important in last year's survey." Not coincidentally the number of freshmen planning business careers also increased slightly. Nearly three-quarters of the freshmen seek recognition as "an authority in my field."

Among the other attitudinal trends discovered by the poll:

- Fewer students than last year thought high school was too easy.
- Fewer freshmen entered college with B- or higher grade-point average.
- Fewer than half the freshman class of 17 million favors legalizing marijuana, while 43 percent who favor legalizing abortion is down from last year's 51 percent.
- Nearly half the freshman class favors legal sanctions against homosexual relationships.

Columnist advises chemistry teacher

Astro Awareness
by JULI REALY

"I am presently teaching chemistry at Harper College. I am exploring a change of career. What might I try for my new field of endeavor to lead to success and personal satisfaction? What should I beware of in my faults and weaknesses? Thanks."

Interpreting this particular chart was certainly a challenge, for it is not the chart of a "simple" man. A complex chart synthesizes a complex personality, and here, in a perfect example.

Beneath an aura of secrecy and steacim a very unique, powerful and emotionally sensitive personality can be found. You are intelligent, creative and fealible. Often helping others "bail out" of difficult situations.

You have natural abilities for positions of leadership, and a deep underlying need for social recognition. The problem that may lead to is that it conflicts with your basic Aquarian nature. You probably value your freedom and independence to greatly, not to speak of your personal privacy, that you may never feel completely comfortable playing a leader-type role which usually requires accepting many responsibilities. Regardless, you could be very successful in positions which require these qualities. You have excellent teaching abilities, although your methods may not be the "typical" it seems as if this should be personally satisfying to you. But, I can detect some dissatisfaction. Not from the actual amount of teaching itself, but from the limited amount of income it offers. Your chart indicates that you like to be generous, a big spender. It probably makes you feel good about yourself. You do have a need for financial security and ownership of property. Unfortunately, we all realize that teaching does not provide the opportunities for great financial gain. You may want to explore fields such as photography, sales, computer technology, investigation, writing, publishing or advertising. There are indications that someday you may travel in association with your job, or work from your home. My strongest recommendation for you would be to investigate the possibilities of business ownership. You have a natural know-how for the handling of finances, people and problems that may come along with this kind of pursuit, and I'm sure you could be very successful.

An unusual business would suit you best, since it would allow the vast part of your personality to come out. You could try dealing with books, antiques, sports equipment, animals, especially horses and equine supplies, computers, audio (and/or visual) equipment, the metaphysical, or entertainment and amusement centers that should give you something to ponder.

In your personal life you should strive to trust people more, especially when in competition. Try to be more open with your intentions, so that others may not be misled. Don't feel as if though you have responded to every situation or challenge that arises just to prove your integrity and courage to others. Find an outlet for your sympathy and helpfulness that will serve a

'Elvis is not God!'

Elvis Presley is not God. Now that some of you have taken deep breaths, I will continue.

Elvis Presley was a performer who came along at the right time and the right places. He gained fame and money for his "swaying hips." The women thought of him as the sexiest symbol ever and the men thought of him as a hero, or idol. Elvis Presley was in the rock 'n' roll forefront with notable stars like Buddy Holly, Eddie Cochran and many fine rock 'n' roll bands. Being in the forefront like Elvis meant no privacy and little time in the public without being mobbed down for autographs.

Elvis could not handle all the pressure of being a "hero." It took its toll on Elvis' health. He began to feed himself garbage and pills, becoming a physical wreck.

The unhealthy state, plus more than 1000 pills, killed Elvis Presley. Many of his hard core fans had not publicly cried as they did when Elvis died, since JFK was shot down in Dallas. Many of Elvis' hard core fans still believe that Elvis never died.

The fans believe stories in the newspapers that are found in grocery store check out lines. The headline read, "ELVIS

ALIVE AND WELL IN TOP FLOOR OF GRACELAND - OR ELVIS PRESLEY LIVES!

Many Elvis fans do not believe that Elvis let his health deteriorate. They all jump on Elvis' personal doctor. Hey, he took the pills, he put handfuls of junk food into his mouth, the doctor never helped him. Worse yet, the fan does not realize that the cause for all the drug taking is from the fans themselves.

But, Elvis Presley is dead. His corpse lies in a casket, which is in a concrete vault, which is surrounded by bugs, worms and dirt. The medical and coroner reports say the person buried there is no one other than ELVIS PRESLEY. But, Elvis Presley is dead. Or is he?

He supposedly died a little over 3 years ago or did he? His fans talk of him now as if he were still alive.

The fans buy souvenir programs. They buy Elvis memorabilia. They buy anything with Elvis' picture on it. They pay money to see the movies Elvis made. They pay money to see Elvis biographies and they pay money to see Elvis Presley IMITATORS.

A recent survey by the American Association of Performers revealed that "at last count," 1 out of every 11 performers are Elvis Presley imitators. This is an increase of 200 percent over the last 5 years. At this rate, in 3 years 1 out of every 6 performers will be Elvis Presley imitators."

The figures are staggering. Sure, I always knew that there were sick people in the world lacking from their own personality. But, what is much worse, is that Elvis fans are supporting the imitators.

Maybe it is me. I do not like anyone who is making a living off of someone who is dead. Sure, if it is a biography it seems O.K. But, to work day after day, doing the same show, well it's ridiculous. Maybe the best word to describe these people is "parasite."

Not only are imitators at fault, but the fans are more to blame.

The fans buy souvenir programs. They buy Elvis memorabilia. They buy

C.I.A., colleges appeal to court

WASHINGTON, D.C. (UPI)—The Central Intelligence Agency has appealed a court order forcing it to reveal the names of college researchers who helped it conduct drug-related behavior modification experiments. Publishing the names, CIA lawyers said, would make it harder for the CIA to get new intelligence sources.

The stakes in the case are certainly high. The CIA stands in line sources, and quite a few colleges and universities stand to lose some credibility in the hat of academicians who participated in CIA projects in public.

For example, just one CIA project code named MKULTRA involved in schools and at least 186 researchers during the 50s and 60s.

In an appeal of a Dec. 1979 decision by U.S. District Court Judge Louis Oberdorfer, the CIA told the court that "disclosure of the researchers' names would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of their privacy." It added that institutions and researchers involved in MKULTRA were "intelligence sources," and thus were protected under the National Security Act and the Freedom of Information Act.

John Sims, attorney at the Public Citizens Litigation Group, and Dr. Sidney Wolfe, director of the Public Health Research Group and the CIA in 1978 under the Freedom of Information Act, claiming that the agency hadn't disclosed the names of all the researchers and institutions involved in MKULTRA. The CIA has, so far, revealed the names of 58 institutions that they claim did not object to the disclosure.

In August, 1977, then-CIA director Stansfield Turner told congressional committees that 15 research foundations and chemical and pharmaceutical companies, 12 hospitals and clinics—in addition to those associated with universities—and three mental institutions were involved in MKULTRA.

Turner admitted some of the drugs developed by researchers had been used on unwitting subjects, who were given the drugs in "safehouses" in New York and San Francisco. One compound developed by researchers, code named "K" drug, was developed as a knock-out drug and subsequently used as a pain killer for cancer patients.

"Most of the people and institutions involved are not aware of agency (CIA) sponsorship," Turner testified, explaining that much of the research funds granted to institutions and researchers had been donated through foundations established by the CIA.

"I am a citizen first and a scientist second," Richard York of the Cope God Mental Health Center told the Chronicle of Higher Education. "If there was any violation of ethics, I would still put my priorities in that order." York said the CIA-funded research he did was "imperfect."

John Marks of the Center for National Security claimed the research published by scientists who knew the CIA supported their work did not always in-decide why the agency wanted the work done.

However, Marks told the Chronicle, scientists would sometimes answer specific questions posed by the agency, like "How to give LSD to an unwitting subject."

Finally, the "safehouses" where subjects were given drugs without their knowledge were established because laboratory research could not provide the CIA with all the information it needed.

"It is important not to blame people because of their cooperation with the CIA," Marks maintains. "If researchers into sensory deprivation said people should not be subjected to such experiments for longer than six days, the agency would put people in such situations for longer than six days."

Movie Review

New film is a comedy on chic

Written by Jay Presson Allen. Directed by Sidney Lumet. Some movies know what they're aiming for. Just tell me you want 'down'—I know what it wants. What seems to be a vulgar comedy on chic, in reality a wild and mostly naive yet, see, corporate power struggles and chic.

The film has a promising start, but soon diverts into tedious, feckly constrained drama. Max Hirschfeld (Alan King) is the owner of a movie studio, a stubborn tycoon, a power fiend of large proportions. Bones Burton (Al McGraw), his minister, is a successful TV producer. Trying to advance her power and independence, she wants to run Max's studio. He refuses, so she goes for a young scripter, playwright Peter Webster. The relationship between these two people is not thinly drawn, it even keeps mild interest. The rest of this drama plods along with bits of humor that are scattered throughout the film as though they were for comic relief only, instead of being wit, but being unfunny. The only really amusing scene comes when Bones chains Max, through a shopping center. After catching him, using a football tackle, she beats him in the head frantically with her purse.

Frantic is the right word for this style. Lumet's manic pace goes from mere outrage to gloomy, but he fails in balancing the two extreme levels. Unlike director Norman Jewison, who skillfully demonstrated that talk with "And Justice For All," Screen like a depressing interlude with Max and his alcoholic wife (Dina Merrill), and Max going into a screaming, supposedly funny fit are so indelicately mixed that the movie takes on a better-asker tone.

There are good performances by King and McGraw, but they can't help clarify the disordered intentions of this satire. The style is there in "Just Tell Me What You Want," but without execution.

Rating for "Just Tell Me": 2 stars

New REO I.p. good

It didn't seem possible in fact, it still doesn't, but it is. The Wagon has recently released "Nine Lives," an album that just about matches their "Time" lp with regards to quality.

This hard-rocking Illinois band has only recently been considered of superior caliber, which, as everybody in the rock business knows, usually lasts all of a year or so.

But not so with REO. Beginning with their live "You Got What You Play For" double live album a few years ago, Kevin Cadogan, Gary Richrath, and Co., have produced three smash recordings in a row.

The nice thing about these albums is the fact that they're not hits just because the previous one was good. REO had only minor success with their LP's until Cream joined the group permanently, beginning with the live album.

No, the reason people have come out in hordes to pick up these recordings is because they're basically good rock. The kind of rock that everybody who knows what rock is appreciates and savors with each playing of the songs.

Although Side 5's only hit is "Back on the Road Again," the other songs among them "Need You Tonight," are well done.

But Side 1 is the best side by far, and the most well-known. Beginning with "Heavy on Your Love," REO pumps out "Drop It," "Only the Strong Survive," "Easy Money," and an old Chuck Berry tune, "Rock of Road Music," as only REO can do it.

Many rockers agree that REO is a new bet to be considered one of the top groups in rock today, and "Nine Lives" confirms those opinions.

Basketball drops to Thornton in tourney

by JOE KUSEK
The Harper women's basketball did everything a coach could ask for. They rebounded well, was patient on offense and played fairly well on defense. But the Hawks could not, no matter how hard they tried, get the ball through the hoop.

Harper was ice-cold from the floor in its 86-57 loss to Thornton last Thursday night in NJCAA Sectional play.

"We turned off the offense in the second half," said women's coach Tom Teschner. "We just went cold and then started making silly mistakes and weren't playing together. They went into that 1:51 zone and we didn't react to it."

The Hawks looked like they were headed straight for the championship game, when they opened up a 14 point lead midway through the first half. It was time to make plans for the final.

But then it was as if someone put a cover over the basket as Harper could only manage to sink 3 of its 18 field goal attempts in the last seven minutes of the first half. The cold spell enabled Thornton to close the gap to 36-31, when the two teams headed into the lockers room at halftime.

The Hawks could not shake the cold spell in the second half, shooting a dismal 8-for-28 from the floor for 28 percent, a percentage low by anybody's standards.

The Hawks could literally not buy a basket as the ball went every which way but in it hit the front of the rim, the back of the rim, the side of the rim, off of the backboard and out and countless times it rolled in and out for the lockout Harper.

The women closed out the most successful season ever for Harper women's basketball, ending the season with a record of 11-10.

Sophomore Val Weidner, one of the most prolific scorers in Harper history for men or women, finished her last game at Harper with 24 points. Another sophomore, that Teschner will have a hard time repeating, is Mary McTigue.

TOURNOY: Harper's Mary McTigue along with a Thornton player looks for the referee's decision on who gets the ball. McTigue spent much of the hotting for loose balls but the McTigue did not get a team-high six assists while setting up the Harper offensive attack.

McTigue finished with 11 points and a team high 20 rebounds and Lee Ann Rose chipped in 12 points. Also playing well were Viv Weidner, Debbie Dike, and Karen DeLam.

Harper sends five wrestlers to nationals this weekend

by JOE KUSEK
About this time of year Harper wrestling coach Norm Lovelace starts planning his annual trip to Worthington, Minnesota. And this season is no different as five Harper grapplers will be heading for the national meet this weekend. Quality, not quantity has been the decision for the Harper wrestling team. Despite opening at a couple of weight classes, the Hawks managed to claim second place with 700 points in Region IV champ DuPage's 128-124.

Three Hawks walked out with first place medals and two others placed third to qualify for nationals.

Harper champions were Jay Evans at 128 lbs., Dan Weber 136 lbs. and Rod McWhorter at 160 lbs. H. D. Leggett placed third at 142 lbs. and Jeff Richard was third at 172 lbs.

"I wasn't really surprised without performance, but I was very pleased," said Lovelace. "Some teams in my seven years at tournament time. I think our schedule has to do a lot with that in the rest of the tournaments we were in, we went way over our heads. But at the end of the season the kids are ready to perform."

Harper's first champ of the afternoon was Evans, who ripped a knee of DuPage's in the finals. Kane has lost only twice all year, both times to Evans.

"Jay is tough as leather. He is basically 100 percent better than last year," said Lovelace. "He's polished up on his technique, that's where his biggest improvement has come. Right now he is putting together some good wrestling mechanics."

The Hawks next champion came from Weber, who left no doubt that he was headed in the finals. Weber pinned his way into the finals then edged Roy Harrison of Lake County to take home the gold.

The biggest surprise for Harper came from the performance of McWhorter who won at 136 lbs. McWhorter, came into the meet unseeded and destroyed Jim Jones of DuPage's 16 in the semi, then won by default in the finals over Bernard Giles of Joliet.

"Rod was a super, pleasant surprise for us," said Lovelace of McWhorter. McWhorter was beat out on his own team for the 136 and 142 spots. "He's been up and down this season, but when he's hot, he's hot. But with a record of 21-1, guess he's been more up than down."

Leggett to earn a spot in the nationals, blew away two-time Iowa state champ Steve Stevenson of Black Hawk, 12-1 in third place. Richard earned his trip to Worthington by coming back through the wrestle backs and defeating Jay Brown of Triton 8-3.

Lovelace is known to be a stickler for conditioning and his teams always come through in the late stages of a match.

"The first thing you do is attack their psyche, then push the heck out of their endurance," said Lovelace who last year's team produced a national champion in Mike Reil. "A guy can have the most moves in the world, but if you don't have much good if he's tired at the third period. There are a lot of matches won in the third period."

"I honestly don't think any team is in better condition than we are. Eight minutes of wrestling is hell and a kid can fight that off, that's one more edge he has."

"If the breaks fall right a couple of Harper wrestlers could have bragging rights over all the wrestlers in every junior college in the United States."

Gymnasts prove they're here to stay

by JOE KUSEK

Well, surprise, surprise. Like the Phoenix, who rose from the ashes, the Harper women's gymnastics team came from being non-existent only a year ago, to be Region IV champions and national qualifiers this year.

"This is a surprise, we just wanted to finish the season as a team," said Cindy Curtis who surprised herself with a first place finish in the floor exercise at the region meet. "People were dropping out but we had a nucleus of a team the whole year."

One person who has enjoyed this year immensely is sophomore Barb Polvere who was victimized when the team was forced to fold last year.

"This year has been a lot better. I really wanted to keep everyone interested, I really wanted a team this year," said Polvere. "This is so different for me, there's so much more elements on this team. This year there is more of a real commitment. It's just not coming here for gymnastics and that's it, we're more like a family."

Besides Curtis and Polvere, the other gymnasts heading for Baltimore this Friday are Mary Beth Black, Kathy Blake, and Sandy Colgate.

Martha Bell, women's athletic director and Zeltner have been very supportive this year. Many people didn't expect anything out of us and didn't start caring until we made a name for ourselves," said Polvere who had to make the big adjustment from competing on the compulsory level to competing on the more advanced optional level.

Curtis probably summed it up best on the reason for the team's somewhat surprising success. "It's all teamwork, we don't have enough people to have stars."

Harper. (Dave Photos)

New PE classes offered

By MARGUERITE

The physical education department is offering two new physical education classes. They are PED 99 Diet and Exercise, taught by Associate Professor Bob Nolan, and Dr. Don Scheerer, and PED 149 Prescribed Exercises, taught by Jim Democourous of the University of Illinois, Circle Campus. Both are in-demand exercise programs designed to improve one's physical fitness level. Nolan says that the two courses are special and they differ from other courses in that they offer personalized physical fitness assessment. The fitness assessments are then followed by an individualized fitness program for each student. Nolan says that the courses teach people how to exercise intelligently in order to improve their health and develop a more active lifestyle. Some of the testing will be conducted in room M22. Exercise areas to be used will be 18 building's indoor running track, and Nautilus weight room (M24). PED 99 is offered the second eight weeks of the semester. Classes begin on March 11, and run on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 1:30 p.m. to 3:15 p.m. PED 149 will begin with the start of the summer session on May 20, and will run on Mondays and Wednesdays from 5 p.m. to 7:40 p.m.

Student seeks local seat

By Peter Wicklund

A Harper student and the mother of four is running for the Palatine Township District 13 Board of education. Madge Spiller, a Rolling Meadows resident, is three hours away from completing her requirements for a teachers aide certificate.

Mrs. Spiller is very excited about her first attempt at public office. She signed her past experience as a hall monitor at Palatine and Rolling Meadows High Schools, her volunteer work at a local mental health center, and of course, being a mother as criteria for running for the elementary school board. Mrs. Spiller's major concern is in improving students' attitudes and self images at the elementary level. "Kids need to come out of elementary school with a positive attitude. This will help them tremendously in high school and the real world," said Mrs. Spiller. "A kid should be able to look at himself and say 'I'm good' no matter what his interests are," she continued. Mrs. Spiller feels that there is a major contribution to drug and crime problems in later years.

Another factor that Mrs. Spiller feels attributes to children's attitudes is how their teachers affect them. "A teacher should be open to his students as much as possible," said Mrs. Spiller. Mrs. Spiller feels that a teacher's personality should be evaluated besides his ability.

Mrs. Spiller contends that issues such as budgeting may be a problem to her but she is trying to overcome this obstacle. Presently she is talking to as many teachers and administrators as possible and listening to their opinions on issues. About the budget of the district, Mrs. Spiller hopes to use her knowledge of running a family to help her in where cuts should be made. "Like in a room down on our budget I will cut out the unnecessary frills first. For example, going out for dinner or to a show," Mrs. Spiller said.

Salt Creek plan Harpers link to surrounding area

To some it may be just another hole in the ground but to the Harper community the Upper Salt Creek Watershed Project could be a goldmine.

This project involves the construction of a reservoir on the northeast corner of the campus that will cover 16 acres. Various Palatine officials have asked the Board of Trustees to consider letting the village have access to perimeter roads and parking lots 11 and 12. If permission is granted, the area could be used as a recreational facility. If not, it would simply serve its primary purpose of flood control.

Regardless of the boards decision, the reservoir must be built for flood control, instead of letting it collect ducks (like the other lakes on campus). It could be put to good use by Harper students and community members.

Obviously, more people would be attracted to the campus in order to use that facility. This would provide a perfect opportunity to show off the other features of the campus such as the three new additions.

Since Harper could be added as a rider to the Palatine park district insurance policy, there would be no liability on the college's part.

Parking should not be a problem since the heaviest use of the facility would most likely come during the evening and weekend hours when the campus is virtually uninhabited.

A section of the parking lots could be partitioned off for the sole use of those wishing to use the lake. Since this could possibly cause a slight inconvenience to Harper students/staff, reduced rates could be offered on boat rentals, etc.

The construction of the reservoir could also open the doors for several new courses. Instruction in rowing, canoeing or even fishing could be offered to interested parties. A logging strip on the perimeter of the lake would also be a plus for physical fitness enthusiasts.

Lake Opeka, a recreational lake located in Des Plaines, started off much the same way. But with the addition of a golf course and a marina it turned into a major source of revenue for the community. This allowed for a cut in taxes and better park district programs.

Overall, the Watershed Project would fully open the campus doors to the community in addition to providing many benefits directly to Harper.

This is Harper's chance to become fully involved in a program that directly involves the community and it is the board's opportunity to either sink or swim in community affairs.

Those "involved" need time to get together and have fun

desk of Mike Simkus
Feature Editor

If you do not participate in any of our school activities, be they sports, clubs, organizations or student activities, please do not read any further. I am not writing this for you, nor do I want to waste your time.

If you're "involved," please read on!!!

We get involved, we work hard and we have fun, right? Well, maybe we do not have enough FUN. We have little time for FUN. Usually, we get done with our activity involvement and go home. Maybe once in a while we go out with a few friends from our respective organizations and have FUN. But we rarely see other students who are involved. Why don't we all get together?

I propose an activity where we can all "get together." It could be a sock hop in the dance studio. It could be "a day on the green in front of the school of course in spring" sort of an outdoor barbecue. It could be a picnic in one of the neighboring farmer pastures. But, most importantly, it will be a get together for those of us who care. And it will be FUN.

We do not have any kind of an end of the year celebration. Sure, graduation is kind of a celebration. Not all of us graduate though. Many transfer, many have a year to go. What better way to end the year than with a "hoop" "get together"?

But why do we have to wait till the last week of school to do this? We could always start "seeing one another" very shortly. That is the one thing that this school has always lacked. We need a place to meet on Friday or Saturday nights that would play "our" music, where we could meet "our" type students and have "our" type of fun.

Could it be done?

Well, yes, I think so. If we could talk to our Student Activity Directors (Jean Pankonin and Fred Waters) and prove to them that it would not cost the school anything.

If we charged a nominal (one or two dollars) fee for entrance we could make this activity be one of the few student activities in the black financially. The money would go out for the room (rent-deposit), Campus police and clean up. The clean up operation could be related between clubs only if we are not infringing on union contracts.

The room I have found is located in Bldg. M and is perfect. It features a high ceiling, wooden floors, and Altec (water) speakers for sound. The dance studio is this room. Bathrooms are centrally located, plenty of parking rooms, lighted parking lots and far away from any classes as if there were any late Friday or Saturday night.

Each club or organization could take turns supplying the refreshments or chaperones. In this way, each club would be responsible and could have money in their "bank" because of any profits made on selling refreshments.

The music part of it is easy. Kinney and the Spazzers at WJMC could possibly help. Since the speakers and system are already there, all we need are the records. I own one fourth of the records WJMC owns and I have a couple of friends who own over 2,000 records individually. I have spun records and there are a couple of Harbingers who have done the same.

It does not always have to be records. Once in a while we could have "live" club bands. I know bands that would jump at the chance, some would do it for free just for the exposure. For example, if we had this last year, I could have had "Off Broadway" (a local group now very big on the national concert scene).

Interested?
Let's not waste any more time. I'm getting excited! Let's Go!

Plagiarism: who is cheating who?

by NORA NORTON

Cheating in the name of the game and just about every college or university campus is the target.

Here at Harper, for instance, bulletin boards recently displayed ads for "Research Custom Writing" by a Chicago based firm and a California firm which sells "research" papers.

According to one advertisement, the student just sends in one dollar for a catalog which gives "ready accessibility to thousands of quality research papers covering all college subject areas."

Several members of the faculty area concerned that the students are being exposed to advertising media that encourages them to cheat.

"These concerns (firms) are constantly advertising and there are notices put on the boards," said Robert Powell, Associate Dean of Communications, Humanities and Fine Arts.

"We go around removing them because it is obvious that the opportunity to cheat is given to the student by these advertisers," he said.

Powell feels that there is a definite increase in plagiarism copying another's ideas and writings and passing them off as one's own. In part due to the "paper mills" and in part due to changes in moral values.

"Another problem is that some students are not really clear on what plagiarism is," said Powell.

"Some students are not aware that everything they read and then write about (even newspapers) has to be credited as a source," he pointed out, "and if they are just repeating the ideas without giving credit to the sources, it is plagiarism."

A similar comment was made by Frank Smith, Assistant Professor of English.

"I think the real problem with plagiarizing is that the student is not aware of it as cheating," he said.

I discovered a person cheating last semester and the student was failed, but I am not aware of having any student cheat lately," said Smith.

"I don't want to spread a lot of time being a cop," he added.

"There is always the question of whether too much cheating is going on and what to do to stop it."

"Or if there is too much repression, will the nervous student be harmed," he said.

The recurrent theme of the teachers interviewed is that there are two types of plagiarizing one conscious and the other unconscious.

"Unconscious plagiarism is widespread and ought not to be penalized," said Leroy Motia, Assistant Professor of English.

"It is a detestable Paul if I find they have copied word for word," he said.

"I know the level of the student's writing and am offended when the student tries to pass off a paper that is copied."

He pointed out that style, diction and syntax mark a professional writer and that even an 'A' student would not know the terms and technicalities that are known only to the profession.

Motia cited the case of a student who had turned in a paper which was obviously not his work.

"It took me about eight hours of searching to match the title of the article."

"I was furious," he said.

"Not only did I spend all that time searching, but I was also a day late in returning papers to students in one of my other classes."

"I am not personally aware of any increase in plagiarism," Motia said, "as much as I am aware of a certain attitude which will perhaps lead to or excuse plagiarism."

He went on to explain that there seems to be a feeling today that "one does not go to colleges and universities to be educated, as much as to be certified."

Motia believes this kind of thinking could lead to a cynical approach where plagiarism would be acceptable.

To Dr. John Macmore, Professor of Speech, the issue of cheating is deeper than just copying.

"Not that the problem doesn't exist," he said, "I am concerned."

But he believes that the significance of cheating involves the student as a person.

The student has an obligation to fulfill and his own credibility is affected either positively or negatively on the basis of how the student documents the ideas or material," he said.

There seemed to be agreement among the professors that the student who intentionally cheats whether he copies from "research" papers or from other sources, deserves to be failed and that the student, in the long run, is only cheating himself.

Dickey entertains audience

by NORA NORTON

Just prior to his poetry readings, novelist, film-maker James Dickey held a brief question-answer session concerning his novel "Deliverance."

"I was interested in telling the story which could be appreciated on different levels. As an action or adventure story (one of the greatest of all themes) that of the hunted becoming the hunter."

"I was also interested, since I shoot (using a bow and arrow) in death metaphysical (bows and arrows versus rifle, using the element of surprise and out thinking the other guy)," he said.

Dickey, the poet and showman, then entertained an audience of well over 100 people on the evening of February 29 at Harper.

"Poetry is a very great activity," said Dickey.

"I began to get interested in writing when I found words would say what I wanted them to say. I found a power in them."

Words, say the things that are important to people," he said.

And to hear Dickey read his words is like hearing a pianist playing a difficult passage.

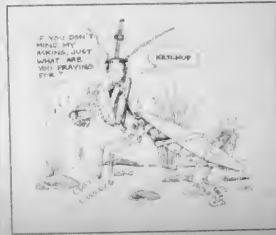

He chose a variety of pieces to illustrate what he had written over the years: "The Cage Country," "The Strain," "The Night Hunt of the Five Year Old," excerpts from "Jericho" (a prose poem), "The Sheep Child" and a poem from a new book not yet published.

In his very marked Southern accent he regaled the audience with explanations of his experiences which led to the writing of his poems.

At one point he drew his audience in, asking them to anticipate the end rhyme of the piece he was reading.

To illustrate a point he was making, Dickey (mimic the Southern accent) did a remarkable imitation of William Buckley reciting a line.

At present he is finishing a new poetry book and there is another novel in the works, the first fifty pages of which have been published in the February 1960 issue of Esquire under the title "Cahill is Blind."

Porno letter stirs Univ. of Wash.

SEATTLE, WA (CP)—A "pornographic" letter written by a University of Washington student and printed in the "UW Daily" by a departing editor who was "locking up his heels," has sparked a flurry of outrage from UW faculty, students and

Daily staffers. The letter, which included charges of sexual harassment and explicit details of the anonymous author's alleged sexual adventures with two unnamed professors, ran with an editor's note explaining that the author's name had been "withheld by request." Daily editor Chris Villiers printed the letter on his last day on the job. Clark Humphrey, his successor, decried the publication of the "pure porn" in an editorial in the following edition.

"The new editor is not responsible for the selection of material in any issue prior to this one. Similar material will not appear in the future," he restated.

Humphrey said that Villiers had printed the letter in a farewell issue that included some other "unusual" items. In a protest against the letter, the Associated Students of the University of Washington withheld its regular advertising for one issue. Barbara Kröhn, publisher of the Daily and faculty advisor to the paper, told the "Seattle Post-Intelligencer" that she had been ill and absent from her office during the time Villiers was producing his last paper. "I would have tried to encourage them not to run it," Kröhn said, pointing out that the Daily is not subject to administrative censorship.

So while the UW Board of Publications has announced its intentions to discuss the Daily editorial policy and the letter, Humphrey says, "everybody is going to say that it shouldn't have happened and it won't happen again, and that will be the end of it." None of the parties involved have been able to contact Villiers since the letter appeared.

Leadership manifests in emergencies

"Dear Juli, I am currently retired and attending Harper. I have been toying with the idea of going for a Bachelor Degree, but cannot make up my mind the best field in which to seek it. Based on your astrological evaluation after looking at my date of birth (3-27-54), what avenue of study should I pursue and what other information do you feel will be of interest to me?"

Many specifics of chart interpretation are automatically eliminated without an actual birth time to work with. But, general characteristics are still revealed by the placement of the planets within the signs. Your Sun, Moon combination both in the sign Aries represents that you are inwardly very strong, aggressive and impatient, a good initiator for new projects. You have good leadership qualities which manifest themselves the best in

by JULI REALY

emergency situations when things seem to be out of control. You are quite unadvised, though your ideas may be a bit unconventional. Some may see you as just ahead of your time. You are basically a rational person, but at times, your thoughts may be affected by your feelings, especially in the way you communicate. This makes you not only emotional yourself, but sensitive to the feelings of others.

You have excellent creative abilities, and with your imagination, you are quite capable of new and unique styles of expression. You could apply these talents very well by pursuing an education in the arts. You should experiment with graphic or fine art, music, photography, filmmaking, printmaking, cartooning or writing. Most likely, you would enjoy writing fiction, science fiction, short stories, poetry or lyrics over journalism, though you could be successful at both. Other pursuits you may find satisfying are philosophy, theology, sociology or the metaphysical.

With your gifted mind, and your adaptability, you seem as if though you just enjoy education purely for education's sake, regardless of what it may be that you are studying. No wonder you can't make up your mind. I hope these ideas will be helpful! And if you don't mind my getting personal, I feel I must commend you. It pleases me, that at this point in your life, you are still an achiever setting goals for yourself. Typical for the Aries go getter. So go get 'em, and Good Luck!

Anyone wishing astrological interpretations please submit specific questions and complete birth data to the Harbinger Office located in Bldg. A367. Look there for further details.

Ska: Newer than 'new wave'

Well, here it is: the latest breaker in the New Wave shuffle. Just as all the obviously misinformed, investigative media journalists have pre-pleased and pouted in while embarrassingly misinterpreting the music, another trend has altered the constantly changing pace of this nearly unsaturated music we call New Wave.

For the latest in fashions we look to Paris, for electronic trickery we turn to Japan and in contemporary music: those lonesome boys across the ocean are a step ahead of us and the world. This new music has got those acetabular Englishmen out jamming the dance floors again. They call it ska (pronounced skay), or revival or whatever, and over there it's for the mods, and the skin heads, certainly not for the punks and rockers, musically the two groups are mutually exclusive here in the U.S. There is no distinction, for in Britain it is a class differentiation, a social separation. Once the music hits our shores, the mummicking thrill shop happens in Mohair jackets and Clint Eastwood wrap-around sunglasses with their "it's British, it all sounds alike to me" attitude react like everyone else they dance.

Here's what it is: its bands like the Specials, Madness, Selector, and the Beat who draw heavily off bluesbeat, reggae and soul. Ska isn't really new, it's the forerunner to reggae. But music score and mixing with bluebeat and soul: the sound has sharp brass sections with the imminently pounding beat, (don't get offended, it's not disco) and real live harmonies. And boy can you dance to it, you dance, that mindless pleasure that allows us to perspire publicly.

After experiencing three shows in the last couple weeks by the Jam, Madness and the Specials, there isn't enough Band-Aid around that could get one more pop-out of me. This sound spoozes that involuntarily funky body movement out of us and it has brought back the dance floor. Wherever these guys play, their hissing guitars and double blowing brass shake the place and people move. But as the beat goes on and on, and on, I think the impact dwindles. Just as the improvisational beauty and cool of early jazz was lost to get on plastic, the energy of ska is equally difficult to reproduce on albums. The Specials and Madness have a remarkable rapport with the audience, they welcome them on stage to dance, they leap and groove with the audience. The out-of-control frenzy of a floorful of hopping fans is impossible to create in your living room through two speakers.

This is entertainment, that is, this is dance music. Lyrics have become important again, their imphotonous and intonations are being studied and interpreted by the sociologists and psychologists. Ska owes to punk, but can't embrace its attitudes. Where punk is angry and political, mod ska is subdued and social. Punk boled with desire to revolutionize, attack the establishment; threatening with change. Mod wants to unify, pull together. Punk was a movement, cutting hard and violent. To Mod, it's all cool, the inter-racial blend of musicians of the Specials surely suggest togetherness.

The Specials album, (being the most popular) is a relatively sparse offering of what their real live sound does in a hall full of volatile bodies. Produced by Elvis Costello (hardly uncatchable) the Specials just wanted to get it down, and they did in just two weeks, like the Clash, who did the masterfully exciting London Calling in just three weeks. (Flowerd Mac took over a million bucks and two years, somewhat like the Eagles' Dues that give you some ideas!) So get out there and hear this new music dance to it, move with it, but don't expect to be thrilled by an L.P. You don't have to be informed by Hugh Downs as to why you're dancing.

A Harper original

by KAREN J. JOHNSON

Dr. Ronald Stewart, professor of sociology at Harper is a product of his professors. Stewart has been in school during the fifties, sixties and seventies attending a two-year college and seven universities. The teacher he is today "is probably a combination of about five professors I've had during my schooling," Stewart said.

During his years at school he has seen changes. One important change, since he's been teaching is his experience with students talking among themselves during lectures. "When I was in school, that was unheard of."

During one of his sociology lectures, he told students, "There are certain people in life that take things seriously. They actually take things seriously. They try themselves and they expect others to try. But they always give you an out—you're free. But if you go with them and you don't cooperate, they'll get on your case until you see it like they do."

Stewart has been teaching at Harper since it opened. "I was the one and only sociology professor at the time."

Before Harper, Stewart taught Adult Education in Texas. He likes Harper but says, "Colleges really aren't different. It's the levels of education you can teach on. People who are committed to a specialized area want to be in class and learn."

He entered the sociology field by "pure accident." He was going for a Masters in History when a teacher suggested sociology. He applied for a Masters at Illinois Institute of Technology and finished at Northwestern where he got his Ph.D.

One of Stewart's interests is people "I enjoy being with people and competing against them," he said.

Stewart has been with all social groups and classes of people from the rich localities to the blacks in the inner city. He spent ten years with the Youth Commission in Hoffman Estates and also did some investigating for the Catholic Church.

When he first arrived in Chicago from Texas, he decided he wanted to find out about every inch of the city, and so far he's done just that.

"After I got into the field, I loved it. I only regret not getting more degrees. When you know you're successful in mastering a body of knowledge, you can't be anything you want to be."

Stewart was raised on a ranch. He grew up virtually outdoors. He camped and fished and he rounded up sheep for the first time when he was five. Today, he enjoys traveling. "I like to go to water and sun—my wife and I travel to Mexico, Central America and the Caribbean area."

Harper b-ball closes out season

by JOE KUSEK

For many years, the Harper Hawks were flying around without a real to rest their eyes. Well, this season the Hawks finally came to rest, and now with a long-awaited place to call their own the Harper men's basketball team closed out the 1959-60 campaign with a very respectable 18-13 record.

The Hawks this year became a team to be reckoned with, as they finished fourth in the super-tough NAC conference with an 8-4 slate. Harper, captain in their first winning season in a long time, bumped off perennial Illinois Junior college powerhouse DuPage under some very trying circumstances and took powerful Triton into overtime in the second meeting of the two teams.

The NAC is considered by many to be the toughest conference in the state, having three teams rated in the top five for all Illinois junior colleges.

"Having your own faculty makes a world of difference," said head coach Roger Bechtold, who lost six players due to injuries, grades and other various reasons during the course of the season.

"Everything was so positive this year. The players enjoyed playing. They were confident they could win every time. We were doing more of the detailed things necessary in building a winning program. Things like having your own locker, having a place to shoot around, a lot of things that we've never had mean a lot."

Probably the biggest factor for the Hawks winning season was the outstanding play of all-conference guard Tim Logist. The sophomore transfer at times would take complete charge of a game and was almost single handedly responsible for the Hawks' upset victory over DuPage. Logist accounted for about 20 points a game, leading the team in assists averaging 8.7 a game, was the teams second-leading scorer pumping in 16.5 points per game and led the team in shooting percentage by leading 51 percent of his shots.

"He is the best guard I've seen on the junior college level this year," said Bechtold of his super-quick point guard. "He didn't take bad shots and always hit the open man. I believe he is a total team player; he always looks to pass first. At one point in the season I requested him to shoot more. He's very good defensively."

"He has the best court awareness of any player. I've coached. He knows where to pass the ball and what type of pass to use. We didn't have to work on breaking the press as much, all we had to do was get the ball to Tim in the middle. I realize now the importance that a good point guard can make for a team and it will be very tough to replace next year."

Logist wasn't the only player on the Harper team, as Bechtold could count on steady performances from sophomore forward Craig Rawlins.

Rawlins led the team in scoring and rebounding and is a solid candidate for first-team all-conference after being named on the third team last year as a freshman.

The 8-4 sophomore hit for double figures in every Harper game and ended the season with a team-leading 17.4 average.

Shooting 46 percent from the floor. He also controlled the backboard, averaging 10.7 boards per game.

"This year Craig finally reached the maturity needed to make a good basketball player," said Bechtold of Rawlins who even though most of the time gave away latches and weight had to defend the opposing team's top player.

"At one point in the season he became consistent and the team depended on his consistency. He became a real player. He was patient and knew when to make things happen, he wouldn't try to force things."

One of the reasons for the Hawks success was the strength of their bench. Bechtold could freely substitute at any time and not have to worry about the sub getting buried.

"Other years I'd look down the bench and we'd be in trouble," commented Bechtold who freely interchanged Chris Pizask, Dave Strawn, Brad Miller, Jeff Martinik and Rob Dorsey. "This year we had three good guards. Logist, Pizask and Strawn and they handled the guard spot as firmly with. I think against most of the teams we played this year we had an edge at the guard spot."

Strawn and Miller were very pleasant surprises for Bechtold during the season. Freshman Strawn emerged as a starter midway through the season and Miller kept getting more and more playing time as the season went on. Strawn 6.1 points a game and leading in free throw percentage, by connecting on 76 percent of his attempts.

"Dave was a surprise for us," said Bechtold. "He's quick and he's aggressive. He made a lot of freshman mistakes but his enthusiasm and aggressiveness made up for them."

Miller, after somewhat falling away on the pine earlier in the year, came off the bench when the Hawks were hit by injuries and made the most of his opportunities. The sophomore averaged five points a game and was always there when things got tough underneath.

"We were surprised with Brad's performance this year. He did a good job in a supporting role, there were numerous times he came off the bench and did a good job," praised Bechtold.

Bechtold also praised the play of sophomores Pizask, Dorsey and Martinik. Pizask just missed averaging double figures for the season, ending the year with a 9.9 points per game average. Dorsey was right behind with 9.0 a contest. Martinik was the hard-luck case of the year. Last year he was named second team all-conference and was preparing for even a bigger and better season. But the sophomore's swingman was hampered by injuries all year and could not shake a nagging foot injury. Despite his limited playing time, the sharpshooter managed to average 11.6 points a game and collect 7.9 rebounds every time out.

The Hawks were in every game, never being completely out of it - always within striking distance.

"Overall we were much more consistent than last year," said Bechtold. Last year, the Hawks would play the best team in the state on even terms and then go out two nights later and get blown out by a team that was 3-20.

"Early on we played good basketball but we didn't have a good record because of the quality of teams we played in all those games. I was confident we would have a winning year. This is the toughest schedule we've had so far. When we lost DuPage it showed we could beat one of the best teams in the state, that got us over the hump. People now have a lot of respect for the Harper basketball program."

Bechtold got some line play out of reserves Steve Lefbeck and Mike Bayless and hopes both the freshman will return to give him a much needed line to start out with.

"It's going to be tough to replace Logist, Rawlins and all the others but hopefully we can get some quality players and get better as the season goes on," said Bechtold.

Even if the Hawks downslide next year, it will definitely be nice to play on a real "home" court.

HOOPS FOR HARPER Harper's Brad Miller (44) left, and Tim Logist (24) below, collect points for the Hawks during past games. The Hawks ended the season on a sour note, losing to Malcolm X in the sectional championship game. Harper finished the season with an overall record of 18-13 and 8-4 in the NAC conference for fourth place. Miller, as the season progressed, continually was the team leader all seasons, coming through with the key basket or making the Harper fast-break click. The two will be surely missed next season. The Hawks also benefited greatly from playing on a court they could call their own all season. Harper, after playing at St. Vitus's the past years, finally moved into Bldg. M. (photo by Lori Lynn Iov)

Harper's Dave Strawn (14) is seen in action during a game. He was a pleasant surprise for Coach Bechtold during the season. Strawn emerged as a starter midway through the season and Miller kept getting more and more playing time as the season went on. Strawn 6.1 points a game and leading in free throw percentage, by connecting on 76 percent of his attempts.

Anderson picking up support: DuQuaine

"What attracts me to Anderson is his total credibility."
William DuQuaine
Illinois Congressman
John Anderson

by MIKE BAMBACH

The presidential delegates from the 12th Congressional District held a press conference at Harper last Wednesday.

William DuQuaine, a delegate for Illinois Congressman John Anderson, said that, while the favorite in Illinois, Anderson is gaining support out West where former California Governor Ronald Reagan has his strongest support.

"I just got back from Colorado and I can say that Mr. Anderson is gaining in popularity," he declared. "It is not difficult to understand why Anderson is gaining in popularity. His straightforward honesty and his strong showing in the Massachusetts and Vermont primaries has drawn comparisons to Jimmy Carter's presidential race in 1976.

"What attracted me to Anderson," continued DuQuaine, "was his total credibility." DuQuaine also reported that Anderson has accumulated almost $2.5 million in campaign funds. But, while Illinois may be Anderson's best bet for a primary win, he is not considered a "national" candidate for the Republican party nomination.

A Chicago Tribune poll published last Wednesday showed Anderson only 23 percentage points ahead of Reagan, and 13 percentage points ahead of the other major Republican candidate, George Bush.

When pressed about Anderson's chances for a GOP nod, DuQuaine said, "If you had asked me that same question three weeks ago, I would have said little or none. But with the media attention he has been getting lately, he is very much

Double digit inflation causes tuition increase

by MIKE BAMBACH

The Board of Trustees have proposed a five per cent tuition increase for the 1980-81 school year, raising tuition from $18 to $19 per semester hour.

The school, trying to keep pace with double-digit inflation, is only one of many throughout the country that have announced intentions to increase tuition.

Student Trustee Bruce Zanca said in reaction to the board's proposal, "The students have been increased to death. I am sympathetic to the school's financial problems, but it's not fair to the students to have tuition increase every year."

Zanca's main concern is that the proposal will set a precedent resulting in yearly increases in Harper's tuition.

Don Stansbury, director of admissions and registrar, said the increase does not necessarily set precedent.

"The tuition increase proposal is to keep Harper in pace with education it's a logical idea."

Harper's revenue comes from three main sources: taxes, state reimbursement, and tuition.

"It's (tuition) the only revenue we can control," said Stansbury. Harper cannot increase taxes without a referendum, nor can the college depend on a set amount from the state in reimbursements. Therefore, tuition increase is the only possible way for Harper to increase its funds.

Harper, however, is not alone in its tuition increase. The school's 11 increase per semester hour is the proposed increase in a mere drop in the bucket compared to the increases at other colleges and universities. The largest tuition increase announced to date is a 17 per cent increase by Massachusetts Institute of Technology. MIT's tuition will rise from $5,300 this year to $6,200 next year.

The University of Chicago announced a tuition increase of 13.3 per cent for the 1980-81 academic year.

Dr. David Williams, vice-president of academic affairs, said he is concerned that continual tuition increases will deter student registration at Harper. Stansbury, however,

"I don't think tuition increases will be deterrent if other colleges continue to raise tuition."

"Harper's tuition is still a

Analysis

"Vital signs" demonstrate Senate's solidarity, stability

by MIKE BAMBACH

The Student Senate is showing signs of life. On that's nothing new, but people are finally taking notice. They are taking notice because these signs have confirmed the Senate's solidarity and long-sought stability.

The Senate hasn't done anything extraordinary mind you. Indeed, it has been the little things the Senate has done that have impressed critics. And it has been Mike La Varney.

When La Varney took over as president of the Senate on January 29, there was but tension and tension building between the Senators. Outside criticism was not much help either. Downward comments from students and satirical cartoons published in the Harbinger characterizing the Senate as a bunch of pool playing buffoons all added up to a frustrated, ineffective Senate.

The Senate's internal problems resumed a sloppy cloak-and-dagger drama. Student Trustee Bruce Zanca, who also holds a seat on the Senate, had been asked by his fellow senators to ask former president Mark Conneau to resign. Zanca refused his colleagues asking them to give up their number one choice. A month later, the Senate, minus Conneau again asked Zanca to ask Conneau to resign.

Zanca, who is the only member of the Senate who could ask Conneau to resign, again refused, asking his colleagues to again give Conneau another chance.

When, a month later, the senators again approached Zanca, Zanca knew what was coming and agreed. He asked Conneau to resign, but Conneau developed a case of bruised ego and decided to put a "stink" on the Senate.

In his letter of resignation, Conneau asked the student body to "call for the resignation of the Student Senate and Student Trustee (Zanca), with the exception of a few who give their best at all times."

Zanca, however, lavied Conneau to remain on the Senate, as a senator saying Conneau had simply "over extended himself as president."

Conneau accepted, but, still bitter, added that he was going to "give the Senate hell."

Time has healed some of the bitterness between Zanca and Conneau, however, as Zanca and Conneau are, "in the point of talking to each other again."

It was this type of situation the student body saw, and developed as a stereotype of the Senate.

At the time of Conneau's resignation, Zanca himself leveled harsh criticism from dissatisfied students who saw him as a go between from Student Trustee and to the Board of Trustees.

Zanca, in his credit, didn't remember his critics, but still bitter about the misinterpretation of his job, for much of the blame the Harbinger leveled on Zanca.

La Varney, who Zanca calls "a dynamic leader with the unique combination of charisma and leadership qualities," pulled together the disaffected Senate. The appointment of Luan Eliaz to vice-president is also a plus in La Varney's corner.

Eliaz has become the prime exemplification of the Senate's "new attitude"—quiet, yet aggressive.

by Harper.

"We need that revenue," said Stansbury, "so as to not lose any offerings at Harper."

The final proposal will go north before the Board later this month.

They have fought their biggest battle against student apathy, which has become the prime target of the Senate. They may not win the war, but they have taken the steps to combat it. La Varney has said consistently that efforts at student activities sponsored by the Senate are "not real bad, but they could be better." The Senate itself has a more realistic view of how to attack student problems. The Senate hears complaints, but as La Varney says, "You don't always see what's done."

Zanca, whose term runs out in mid-April, has said that student apathy is, "not a characteristic of Harper, but of all colleges, particularly community colleges."

Zanca remains a controversial figure. He is proud and sometimes appears almost arrogant, but, as he says, "that's the way I am."

There are still problems to be dealt with, and sensitive eyes that need an occasional message but the Student Senate is becoming a solid organization in which students can take stock. They can succeed, but only as far as the students will let them.

Changes add to responsibility of all

In yet another effort to increase student involvement and awareness, the Student Senate passed several new amendments to the constitution which will allow for a smoother operation in elections and outlines the qualifications of senators, officers and the student trustee.

Voting for the president, treasurer and five academic representatives will take place in the spring along with the election of the Student Trustee. This move will allow the senate to be active over the summer, instead of sitting dormant throughout the break. This will also allow for a smoother transition old and new when the remaining officers are elected in the fall.

Student awareness will be increased with the passage of an amendment making it more difficult to amend the constitution. One thousand students must be petitioned before any proposed amendment can be ratified. This may well be the most important amendment made since it involves directly "consulting" with a good portion of the student body. After all, the amendments are for the students and they should at least be aware of any proposals.

Impeachment proceedings are also easier to initiate on the part of individual students. In order to bring about proceedings against any member of the Senate, a student merely has to have a minimum of signatures equal to 100 per cent of the ballots cast in the election in which the officer was elected.

All in all, these amendments demand more responsibility on behalf of the senate and more response on the part of the student body.

Both parties must work to uphold their end of the bargain. After all, everyone is in this together.

A look in the mirror reflects one's own truth

The other day I saw an old friend of mine. He didn't look well at all. His appearance was that of one who is tired, distraught, confused, and just plain bored.

I asked him what was new. He answered in a quivering voice, "All hell just broke loose. 'What do you mean?'" I questioned.

His answer was blunt and to the point, "I'm flunking all my classes. I never do my homework. I go home and drink whatever is in the house. I'm dating a girl three years younger than me. I have two groups of friends - one group who don't go to school and work blue collar jobs, the others go to college and appreciate the finer points in life. I feel torn between worlds. I'm lost. I've given up on everything."

I was aghast. I didn't know what to say. Finally, I asked him what he really felt he wanted to do.

He shrugged, "Sometimes I just want to pack it all up and move out to the sticks and hopefully some day get a business of my own point," he said.

"Well," I said, "I think I know you well enough to know that you are not really the type to fit into the working world. I mean, he's face it, when you were a kid, across you were constantly complaining."

"No, it was all right. The bosses loved me. I was a good yes man. I couldn't always handle the technical stuff, but I was learning. It was just that I was juggling the work with school. Everytime they offered me a full time spot I got stomach cramps. I thought it would be nice to earn six dollars an hour, have a company vehicle, settle down. On the other hand, I felt I was above the work. I felt I was wasting talents and interests I had. Whenever I was in public in my work clothes, I thought I was being looked down upon."

"You shouldn't worry about what others think," I said. "OH! I know! I know! I always worry. Sometimes I really feel that I am a celebrity and I think everybody knows me and if I do something different, they will crash down upon me."

"That's bull shit!" I said. "You're nobody. Maybe 1 out of this school could honestly recognize you. And in the community, one in a million? What else do you picture yourself as?"

"I honestly enjoy school, well being around people my age bracket who have similar interests. You know I've a talent with my 'Who knows, with a little help, I might be able to go somewhere with it. I enjoy my classes. I'm really getting things out of them. I never noticed that in high school. I enjoy music, art, politics, theater, movies, sports, literature."

"You like school?" I said. "But why aren't you doing your own thing?" I asked.

"It's not always interesting," he said.

"Yeah, it's interesting," he replied.

"No," I replied, "but if you want something bad enough you can get over obstacles."

"Yeah, but there are always interruptions. There are people to see, girls to date, my job, friends interrupting from college."

I interrupted him. "It's only three weeks till vacation. After that only a month of school and a long summer break. If that could get a bit of socializing done during those breaks. And if you work hard during the week and get the bulk of your homework done, your weekends would be open."

"You're right. I just don't know which direction to go. I wish somebody would tell me Hell, even a hand from the sky pointing the direction. I'm desperate. I'll take an advice anybody can give me."

I smiled at him, and took a deep breath. "My friend," I said, "people can tell you what to do until they are behind your face. However, there's nothing that can change the way you feel deep inside. You have to go with your gut reaction. That is the only way you'll ever be happy. You are your own person. Nobody can change that. All I'll tell you is to slow down. There is always plenty of time. Look into different things. Don't worry about what others think. Re-evaluate your immediate commitments. Dump what you feel is not for you. You can always come back later. Well, enough preaching. You just have to do what you want. Well, I have to be on my way. We'll see you later."

He sighed, "Yeah, thanks for listening. I think I'll come out okay, whatever I end up as. Talk care."

"Sure you will," I said. And I walked away from the mirror.

Vice president attempts to set the record straight

Dear Editor,
I would like to comment on the articles appearing in the February 11 and March 3 issues of the Harbinger concerning the Student Senate of Harper College.

You know what really burns me up? When someone claims credit undue to them and then, what is worse is when they have nerve enough to brag about it. It is a nasty practice that is usually overlooked or ignored by others. But, unfortunately, this trait has come to the Harbinger staff.

Recently at a Senate meeting, with a Harbinger reporter present, Senate members were discussing some plans and ideas for the remainder of the semester. Often informal discussions of plans have also been held, within earshot of the Harbinger reporters. In the February 11 issue of the Harbinger there appeared an article stating ideas and proposals for the Student Senate, coincidentally these same ideas that had already been discussed at previous Student meetings, one-of-a-kind! Later, after many of our ideas were in action, another article appeared in the Harbinger congratulating the Senate on its activities. Also appearing with the article was a cartoon depicting the Harbinger as the emperor for the actions taken by Senators, due to the article written in February.

The truth being, plans had already been acted on even before the first article appeared. It is a shame that such an otherwise fine paper, recipient of the Associated Collegiate Press Award, can allow such deceptive news reporting to go on. The purpose of this letter is to set the issues straight and in hopes of joining efforts with the Harbinger staff in that we can work together and be of better service to Harper College.

Sincerely,
Loren Elias
Vice-President
Representing the

gaining in popularity." Another Anderson delegate, Gene Schlickman, felt that President Carter was "over exaggerating the invasion of Pakistan."

While Anderson's domestic and financial policies are well known, his foreign policy remains rather vague. Schlickman said Anderson's foreign policy emphasis was "on a strong economy, meeting a strong U.S. meaning strong stability and world respect."

Anderson, who based his entire campaign on the importance of building strong self-respect for the nation, is opposed to a naval blockade and the reinstatement of a military draft.

"Anderson feels we need to decrease our dependence on foreign oil by increasing our sacrifice," said Schlickman. "We cannot be dependent on Middle East oil and still maintain world respect," he continued.

This goes hand-in-hand with Anderson's 50 cents gas tax proposal which would discourage excessive use of homegrown oil.

Although he was shut out in the Florida, Georgia and Alabama primaries, Anderson received an endorsement from the black community.

The Rev. Joseph Lowery, national leader of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said the Democratic party "had taken the black vote for granted."

Lowery added, "If they're (the GOP) serious about the black vote, John Anderson is a candidate the black community can look at seriously."

There are three Anderson delegates on Monday's primary ballot: Schlickman, Dugane, and Marguerite Klimkowski.

Other delegates who attended last Wednesday's press conference: Eugenia Chapman (Carter); Gwen Martin (Carter); Lucille Gallagher (Kennedy); Shirley Forpe (Kennedy); Marcus Frank (Kennedy-alternate); Charles Williams (Kennedy-alternate); Richard Sutinman (La Rouché); Don Totten (Reagan); Bernard Pederson (Cron-Keagan); Elaine Catfield (Cron-Keagan); William Phillips (Cron-Keagan); James Ryan (uncommitted); Russel Pusey (uncommitted-alternate); Mariya O'May (uncommitted-alternate); and Edgar Feldman (uncommitted).

The Harper Speech Team scored a victory at the Triton Harper tournament, held Saturday March 1, at Triton College. Harper's Sweepstakes and Interpreter's Theater teams each placed first in their respective competitions.

Photopinion Students sound off over boycott

Mary Klesner
"I DON'T think it's fair to the athletes. They worked pretty hard at it. Russia's not going to change their mind, and it really doesn't have anything to do with politics."

Dave Strawn
"I'M FOR it. I think we should stick with the national idea of the country, and try to teach the Russians a lesson."

Ray Kind
"I'M KIND of indifferent. In some aspects it's good because I think Russia has to get their act in gear. But I think it's bad for the athletes to have to prepare for four years and have the president boycott them."

Debbie Scarpulla
"I THINK he's right in some sense. But he should find some place else to hold the Olympics. It's achievement, and achievement either in a war or Olympics would be a success for the Americans."

Director of Theater is dramatic

by Karin J. Johnson

Mary Jo Willis, Professor and Director of Theater at Harper has always wanted to be a performer. She really became interested and active in high school where she performed in plays.

"Most students go through a searching process in high school but I always knew acting was what I wanted to do. When I was young, my father used to say, 'Stop being so dramatic,'" said Willis.

It was her family that encouraged the arts. "My parents were interested in music, literature, the Arts," said Willis.

Willis has been teaching at Harper for five years. Before that, she taught four years at Lakeview High School in Decatur, Illinois. She's been directing plays for nine years.

This semester she's directing the musical "Guys and Dolls" here at Harper. She herself played General Cartwright in "Guys and Dolls" while attending Ball State University in Indiana.

In her high school and college years she performed in a lot of musicals. "I started out wanting to be a performer, but I think I have a gift for directing. Performing was all in preparation for directing."

She's directed her favorite play "Cat On A Hot Tin Roof" by Tennessee Williams two years ago at Harper. Williams is her favorite playwright. "I like his characters and the sound of the dialogue," said Willis.

"As a director, I think I do better with dramas than comedy. And I'm very critical of my work. I know what's good and what's bad—what works and what doesn't. You've got to be realistic about the whole thing."

One of Willis' professors in college, "and probably my best friend" had the biggest effect on her teaching today. "He showed his students what they could do.

He was realistic yet he said it's okay to dream dreams. He helped me see all the possibilities I had," Willis said.

In her years of directing on the Harper campus Willis has found the students to be extremely cooperative and enthusiastic. "The kids keep me going with their encouragement. They give me the strength to hang on. They all enjoy the theater and generally want to be there. You really have to be with all the hours you put in," said Willis.

And the perfect example is the musical "Guys and Dolls". The students must rehearse every night starting this week so they are totally prepared when the play opens.

"The play is your whole being. You spend all your time on it. And the people on campus are so helpful with the play. The maintenance and moving people, the secretaries and the faculty. They all go out of their way to help. I really appreciate that. You need those kind of people to help you along," Willis said.

Willis' ambition or dream is to work with professional actors. She'd like to direct a key group, which is a team of professional actors who work on a series of plays throughout the year.

"But right now I'm so involved with the program and making it work that I'm second on my list. Someday I'll have to learn to resolve that. If anyone has any suggestions, let me know," Willis said with a smile.

Costello's 20 song lp, a bargain

My "Beaten For Sale" album has 14 cuts, my "Who Is Healey, Big and Bloney" has 14 cuts, my "Introducing Herman's Hermit" has 13 cuts. But, my new Elvis Costello lp "Get Happy" has 20 cuts, which is unheard of for a single disc that is not a greatest hits package. "Get Happy" is the fourth album from the knock-kneed Buddy Holly lookalike, but so many songs that I've decided to take a vacation last week just to relive Costello's newest effort.

Elvis Costello, the modern pop star, will achieve that spotlight known as a starlet with his new lp titled "Get Happy." Costello, a master of cliché in his pop song writing style, has proved again to the listener that he is not "stuck in a rut."

Moods for Moderns
by MIKE SIMKUS

Costello, who had fun with such cliché and puns like, "accident's will happen," "a death worse than fate," "the final solution," "looking for a light in the darkness," proved to all his critics that Costello was definitely not to be reckoned with. On Costello's new album "Get Happy" he toys with other clichés and puns like, "second place in the human race," "black and white world," "beaten to the punch," "human touch," "columbine is over,"

"read you like a book," which are small samples of incorporation of cliché and wit into a delightful masterpiece. Costello writes basically a joke or two on society as Costello sees it. But, as the 30 year old grows older his themes about life become more pessimistic.

On "Opportunity," Costello sings, "I'm in a fine hole, I'm in a trench, I'd be a hero, but I couldn't stand the stretch."

On "Secondary Moderns," Costello sings, "is it out of the question between you and me, is a pleasure or business, or just a bag of fun."

Coming out of his recent marital problems and his old girlfriend problems, both have had an impact on Costello's "wit-and-humor."

Costello, a satirist if there ever was one, continues his brand of humor on "Get Happy." He makes the listener feel happy, most of the material is uptempo and danceable. The keyboards dominate the harmony lines, a driving bass line, an inspiring drum hit and, along with Costello's vocals which are at times storytelling and pleading, make "Get Happy," an album which should be commercially popular.

linear notes say that it is no way does the 20 song album effect quality of the record. Many records following 1980 had less and less material on them. The reason the record companies gave was that groove cramming. (The records with 10 songs or more) were had in sound quality. Nick Lowe, the producer of the "Get Happy" lp, continues that in no way does groove cramming effect sonic or sound quality.

"Get Happy" one can not go wrong. It is a bargain at twice the price. How does that Toyota commercial go? Well, it holds true with Costello's "Get Happy," you get more for your Yankee dollar.

Karma is defined

"What is my karma that has to be worked out in this life? Do you see change in area location, sale of home, type and/or place of employment? For what employment am I bank suited for?"

To be perfectly honest with you, the esoteric branch of astrology which specifically with issues such as past lives, reincarnation, and karma is not one of my specialties. Although I find these concepts very intriguing, as a professional, I try to keep my work on a practical level, dealing with everyday people, problems and solutions. I leave the shrouds of mystery behind to those who lay claim to it.

Karma is "the whole ethical consequence of one's acts in the future existence" to put it simply, one acts what one deserves.

I will approach your first question from a different perspective. Instead of looking at the "karma" that you've earned from a past life, look at what this life is moving to teach you. Each individual's chart symbolizes the nature of the burdens and sacrifices that we must bear throughout our lifetime. In order to learn the lessons that we are meant to learn. This is basically represented by the planets Saturn, Neptune, and the twelfth house.

You are a person with great curiosity, many interests, and much to say. You may have been raised to have a very practical value system, and you may still have your beliefs rigidly upon them. Life's lessons should have led you to break away from this practical approach to life in order for you to express your creative talents fully. Don't attempt to bend for others' needs continually at the sake of your own best potentials. Try to channel your energies toward social-collective-cultural activities or political and spiritual values.

You have many talents to work with in choosing a successful vocation. You are organized, quick, versatile, open, creative and energetic.

You need an environment that allows you some mobility and freedom, and you definitely would fit in among professionals. Someday, you may even be well-known, but be prepared for much hard work and self-sacrifice to always be called for from you.

Your chart indicates excellent teaching abilities, writing and communication skills and efficient management abilities. I feel that you should definitely find a field which allows your creative self-expression to emerge.

The next several years hold many changes for you. Your employment and your home situation will both change, possibly more than once. -Juni may be a potentially good time for the sale of your home! Let yourself explore the many fields of opportunity that can be available to you. But don't expect to get too settled down with any one thing yet. At this point, you should be striving to regenerate your philosophies of life and restructure your future goals. For you, travel may be the key in helping you accomplish this. Good Luck!

Anyone wishing astrological interpretations, please submit specific questions along with the required birth data to the Harbinger office located in Ridge A-37. Look there for further details.

Linda Ronstadt, no new waver

Like an all-star sports team with no incentive to win, or a fine gourmet meal prepared with indifference, Linda Ronstadt's new L.P., "Mad Love" is an example of the product being less than the sum of its parts. The material she sings is mostly proven and very well written. Ronstadt's voice epitomizes the best qualities of a female pop-rock singer, with deflection, tone and impact. She's a real songbird and the musicians are respectable, experienced session men. So if people are asking what else makes a great album, what prevents this L.P. from being just that, I'll tell you one...there is plenty.

If Linda Ronstadt is to be today's rock 'n' roll interpreter, she owes a lot to the translation. She covers songs by Eliza Costello, Neil Young, a guy named Mark Goldenberg (who headed an ex-L.A. punk band called Cretones) and even Bobby Hart. There is certainly nothing wrong with covering other people's songs. Ronstadt has made a fine living thanks to J.D. Souther and other songwriters. But this was believable singing those songs, her voice could convince us she meant it. Her dreamy Mexican-eyes and innocence made us go along with her, but on this album, the songs are written by a satirist, a realist, a punk and a couple others. That's quite a variation in styles and intentions, and Ronstadt just can't pull it off and make me believe she means any of it.

The whole L.P. smells of irrelevance and Ronstadt is as trendy as the display window at Fiorucci's. When "Country and Western" was big she was Country and Western, when it was South California pop she transcended to that, then the roller-disco thing and, now New Wave. From the pseudo graphic black and white album cover to the bits in between songs, it's just one thing to do albums today and everyone's doing it. Her music has migrated from lovely to nearly laughable.

The sound of the L.P. is ok, but it is devoid of any meaning. The sharp, biting sound of Eliza Costello's satire has gone flat. The heart felt truth of Neil Young sounds apathetic and the "damn it we're gonna do it my way or I'll burn this place down" intensity of a punk sounds sedate. This is an L.P. by a vocalist, not a lyricist or a composer. It's the voice that is spotlighted, not necessarily the intentions of the music and by cutting the heart out of these songs Linda convinces me of only one thing: lifelessness.

I can't say she sold herself out for this new sound, one thing she doesn't need is money. This album is typical of what a lot of money and devoted fans do to performers, they take no risks. She can afford to sing whatever she pleases, she can buy great songs, contribute nothing to her version and it will still sell. The new sound isn't even really new, same old producer, Peter Asher (ex-boyfriend) and basically the same session musicians and friends from L.A. help her out. I think they obtained from Quasimoto for a couple days or they could master the quicker songs of a few times.

True Linda Ronstadt fans will probably buy "Mad Love" anyway, but it sure is interesting and they deserve better. Linda would make an ok first lady, no arguments from me, however politicians and their wives are made of fake suits and popular opinion while today's good music is believable and purposeful and to performer can ride the fence between the two.

Music Review

And now it's time for Madness

The latest wave of music to be coming out of England nowadays is called ska. Ska is a type of music which has its original roots in reggae, but a pleasant mixture of horns, strong emphasis on vocals and a beat which one can't help but want to dance to. Just as the punk music has its fans who like to have-bare-haircuts, (as we used to say as kids "babyboos") I dress up in suit jackets, dark sunglasses, and most important a hat, the old fashion type Carl Malden has made famous. Although the Specials are England's number one ska band, there is a group called Madness who are hot tar here. Look at the English charts, both bands are towards the top. The Madness album, "One Step Beyond" has never been released here in America and it is not hard to see why it is such a hit in England. The album begins with the group's hit "One Step Beyond" a great song with a unique blend of reggae guitar, fine vocals, and a dominating sax that would get anybody off their feet. It is hard to argue that Lee "Lee" Thompson is not the best saxophonist in the business. But the album goes way beyond that, song after song it keeps up a steady ska pace. "Night Boat in Cairo" is another hit with a lead string sax and a fast paced reggae mix. Madness has even got their own version of the ballad "Swan Lake." When I saw this group recently in concert they had their own way of dancing to the new version of the classic ballet, it consisted of loops around the stage and shaking their heads together! ("Thompson Ave.") Finally ends this fine album with a military marching beat of 1-3-2-4 and absolutely no instrumental music.

Only time will tell if this wave of new music will make it here in America. The Specials and Madness were both through town recently and were well accepted, to the extent of people hopping up on stage with them and dancing. Haven't heard this music? In the words of Madness "Well listen buster you better start to move your feet, in the rockness rock steady beat of Madness, One Step Beyond." Pat Felson

Athletes, not only teams, winners

After nationals women learn what to expect

by JOE KUSEK
They were in wide-eyed and somewhat naive. They came away experienced veterans and ready for next year.

The Harper women's gymnastics team did not fare too well at the NJCAA national meet, March 7-8, but came back home knowing what to expect for their trip—happily—next year.

"Before the meet they were very tense and very nervous," said coach Renee Zeltner, who put life back into the team after it faded the previous season.

"But after the finals were over they knew what to expect. They know how it's done and what they need to do. One good thing was when they came back some of them felt the people in the finals were that much better than they were. Happily they're all gun-to-for next season."

Harper's best showing came from Sandy Colglazier. The freshman placed 11th out of 37 competitors in vaulting. Colglazier then hit her best routine of the year on the uneven parallel bars to place 10th out of 31 for Harper. "She just needs a little more work on originality and difficulty. There is no reason why she shouldn't do well next year," commented Zeltner.

Mary Beth Black was the only other Harper gymnast to do well. Black placed 15th on the beam out of 46. The Hawks were hurt team wise when Kathy Blake had to pull out of the vaulting, being hampered by a sore ankle. Zeltner praised Blake for doing a consistent job on all the other events.

A strange disease struck the Harper winter season athletic teams this year. It was called winning.

That's right, every athlete's and women's team enjoyed a winning record for the 1979-80 calendar.

Men's basketball went 16-15, women's basketball had their first winning record ever, with a mark of 11-9, women's gymnastics was one of the year's biggest highlights. The team went from nothing the year before to Region IV champs and national qualifiers this season. And as usual the Harper wrestling team enjoyed a winning year despite being hindered by lack of numbers.

Some of the records are not overly impressive, but still very positive sign for Harper athletes considering records of past years.

Probably the biggest factor was finally having a permanent place to practice, hold meets and games. After being shuffled around from school to school, Harper athletic teams moved into Bldg. M, Harper's new $5 million athletic facility.

Called by a few coaches the "Paulist Pavilion of Community Colleges", Bldg. M is definitely an impressive and imposing site to visiting teams. The new facility gave Harper athletics a much needed lift in the arms as lack of participation was reaching an all-time low.

But while the athletes and fans gammed this year, the biggest losers were the coaches. Besides not seeing winning teams, they missed witnessing some of the finest individual talent ever to adorn Harper uniforms.

Basketball players Tim Loguz and Val Weidner are prime examples. Loguz, a transfer, was a unanimous NIC all-conference pick and considered by more than one coach to be the premier point guard for Illinois junior colleges. The sophomore was directly responsible for the Hawks' upset victory over state-ranked IU-Ellettsville and three some of the most unalterable passes that had to be seen to be believed.

Weidner, also a sophomore, came into the spotlight by averaging over 30 points a game during a four-game streak. Weidner was also an easy choice for all-conference, finishing up the second leading scorer in the state and being near the top for the nation and rebounding. The three-point play would have been perfected for her as the talented sophomore consistently hit nothing but net over time.

The two might have been

VAL WEIDNER shook off numerous injuries to add her talent to the women's team. She will be a big plus to the team when she returns next season. (photo by Lori Lynn Gay) considered the stars of their teams, but the two epitomized the aspect of team play. During the course of the season both had to be told to shoot more instead of passing off to teammates so much.

Loguz and Weidner didn't do it all by themselves, as both teams had talent all the way down the line, a definite change in years past as before the people at the end of the bench could barely walk and chew gum at the same time. This year the subs were capable of doing both rather well.

Men's coach, Roger Bechtold, and women's coach, Tom Teuchner, finally had some decent talent to work with and built winners with it. Women's gymnastics emergence as a top team has to be credited in large part to coach Renee Zeltner. Zeltner brought in enthusiasm usually not found in the junior college level and made the season fun for the women who were competing. Zeltner kept the team together for the whole season and next year Harper should be just as strong, only losing one sophomore.

What can one say about wrestling? No matter what the circumstances, coach Norm

Loveless always manages to build a winner and get people to nationals. Loveless loses people during the season for various reasons but those who manage to last a whole season under "Stormin' Normans", as he is so fondly called, end the season with winning stints.

The thing that was impressive, was not the winning records, but the class of the individuals. The coaches and athletes showed style and class, a rare commodity among athletes in this day and age. They all were quick to praise others and make sure the emphasis was on the team, not the individual. Both coaches and athletes were always available and willing to talk about their team's performance. No prima donnas or Woody Hayes' to deal with.

In covering Harper sports the past year and a-half, these past few months have been the most enjoyable not because the teams won, but because the individuals were winners.

To Roger Bechtold, Joe Kusek, Tom Teuchner, Mike Hensley, Norm Loveless, Renee Zeltner and all the athletes:

Thank you for a truly enjoyable season.

Uphill battle for Anderson

by MIKE BAMBACH
What is next for John A. Anderson? The Illinois Congressman finished a disappointing second to former California Governor Ronald Reagan in last Tuesday's Illinois primary, and faces an uphill, some say almost impossible, battle to slow-down the Reagan landslide.
Anderson picked up 24 more delegates in Illinois, but Reagan picked up 41 more, boosting his delegate total over the 300 mark. Anderson, meanwhile is in third place in the GOP delegate count with 81, while George Bush, who garnered only 11 per cent of the vote in Illinois, remains in second place with 42 delegates. Twenty-six delegates remain to this date. What is alarming to Anderson supporters is not the fact that Reagan won the Illinois primary, but the ease with which he won. Anderson, who hails from Rockford, edged Reagan in the northwest suburbs, but only by a narrow margin, and actually lost to Reagan in the Barrington township by a mere eight votes.

The key for an Anderson upset over Reagan, is obviously, in the immediate Connecticut and New York primaries. Anderson's aide in Connecticut has reported that their candidate, Reagan, and Bush are running neck-and-neck for that state's 35 delegates.

After the New York and Connecticut primaries, the political battle-line moves into Wisconsin where 24 delegates are up for grabs. Thereafter, the primaries will begin moving westward, where Reagan has his strongest foothold.
What is interesting to note is the fact that Reagan hasn't won the majority of votes in any of his primary victories, excluding the South. It would not be brash to assume then that if Anderson were to make an extremely strong showing in Connecticut and New York, he would be right back in the middle of the race.

Strong showings in those two primaries, however, might not be enough to persuade voters that Anderson is "GOP enough." This is what has hurt, and eventually may kill altogether, Anderson's GOP campaign — his inability to garner solid support of the Republican party. Reagan, meanwhile, receives almost 60 per cent of his support from Republicans, while Anderson gets only 25 per cent of his support from the Republicans. It is the independent and cross-over Democrats, which comprise the remaining 20 per cent of Anderson's support, that has kept him in the race this long. And he is running out of cross-over states to fall back on. Wisconsin, which holds its primary on April 1, is a cross-over state. The majority of primaries following Wisconsin, however, are controlled entirely by Republican voters.

Anderson's cross-over advantage would be a definite plus in a national election, and Anderson has depended constantly on the point that, "Everybody knows Reagan can't win in November." But Anderson has only 25 per cent of his party's support, compared to 50 per cent for Reagan.
Anderson, though, is far from

Alternatives to Harper?

by PETER J. WICKLUND

A proposed tuition increase for Harper students next fall may possibly start students to look more closely at nearby four year state schools. The registrar's office at Harper considers an average course hour load for full-time students to be 14.3. A full-time student is considered to be a student who carries more than 12 credit hours.
Courses this year at Harper run $16 a credit hour. Harper trustees are currently considering raising that figure to $19 an hour.
Fourteen point three credits a semester at $19 an hour multiplies to $271.70 in comparison to Northern Illinois University, Northeastern Illinois University and the University of Illinois at Chicago Circle. Harper is not too far behind in semester tuition stands at about $280. Semester tuition at Circle is about $300. Of course, none of those figures include room, board or transportation expenses.

While Harper is still cheaper overall, the differences are not great at all. Students who commute to Harper from the far reaches of Harper's district could very well begin to look into commuting to one of the nearby four year schools where the students may also be eligible for financial aid assistance.

Pool repairs

The leak problem in the swimming pool has been narrowed in on, and officials are hopeful that the pool will be able to open in the near future.
The problem of a leak in the main drain has been corrected, and plumbing contractors are now concentrating on a leak in the surge tank. The pool was filled with approximately four feet of water when the problem in the surge tank was discovered.

After the repairs on the surge tank are completed contractors will begin a slow process of filling the pool with different levels of water, and officials will watch for any further problems.

Two newcomers have joined incumbents Janet Bone and Brian Barch in running for seats on the Harper Board of Trustees. Susanne Ciceo, Business Studies, and Dr. John Pahl, Political, recently filed their nominating petitions.
Susanne Ciceo has no previous political or official experience, but she has nonetheless decided to run for the Board. Ciceo, a wife and mother, is a student at Harper. It was during one of her classes one month ago that Student Trustee Bruce James suggested that Ciceo run for the Board.

"I was honored," Mrs. Ciceo said. "By the fact I was asked. I was also surprised."

"She's very intelligent," said Zasca, "and she's people oriented. She's more in touch with students because she is one herself."

This is the fourth college Ciceo has attended in the past four years. She previously attended Westchester State, Northeastern, and the University of Indiana-Purdue at Indianapolis before coming to Harper.

Ciceo isn't qualified by normal standards, and she is willing to admit so. However, she says, "I don't think you need credentials a mile long to run for office."

Where Ciceo feels she is qualified is in working with people. She has worked as a registered nurse including a stay in Vietnam in 1969.

Ciceo also sees her opportunity to bring "new blood, new ideas to the framework of the board." She is also attracted to Harper. "The support I found between the students and teachers gives me a good feeling I love being here." Beyond that, Ciceo sees a personal need for commitment. "There's something out there for me to grasp on to," she said. Mrs. Ciceo also has a desire to get involved with Harper. "You can't get involved unless you get a chance to get involved — and this is my chance."

As of March 20, the day before the filing deadline, neither incumbent Joas Kluksman or David Tomchek had filed.

Referendum could be only choice left for Harper

"Are you working for him?" I asked.

"Why do you ask?" he said.

"Oh I just saw one of you guys at every dance and I felt a kind of strange to be 'guarding' a door that leads to an empty hallway," I said.

"You could say I'm with security," he said.

"You mean the secret service?" I asked.

He stared, looking at the people still filling in the ballroom and said, "security."

I walked away thinking, "What is security today? Is anything secure?"

I looked at an empty hall of ashtrays and cigarette butts. They were the remnants of this night. It was March 18, the 18th day of captivity for the hostages. It was primary election night. On this night John Anderson workers gathered on the 7th floor of the downtown Marriott Hotel in the Grand Ballroom for what was to be a victory party.

The ashtrays were like the amount of time each and every campaign worker helped, really blown away with the wind.

The cigarette butts were like the workers themselves. Standing around aimlessly, saying nothing, and like the butts the workers were just being there, taking up space.

I stood within 2 feet of Anderson. I could hear the shutters of photographers' cameras. I could feel the heat of the hot white lights for the TV cameras.

The air was full of electricity when Anderson walked into the ballroom. Maybe he would say, "hold on," or "there is still hope." But, he did not. When

From the desk of Mike Simkus Feature Editor

Anderson left the room, like an electrical thunderstorm leaves your area, the electricity in the air was gone.

Reporters scurried into the press room. I walked over to the press room, twiggling by some "security men." And like all of the Hollywood movies, the reporters grabbed phones and started speaking to their respective news outlets.

I walked away after getting my fill of the reporters, and back into the ballroom.

If you were not sure where you were, you would have sworn that you had been at a mass funeral. Possibly six funerals.

had been reported earlier, were those of the other candidate. But this did not happen.

The faces of the people looked like a girl I once knew. The girl I knew was sitting by herself at the X-mas dance, nobody asked her to dance, nobody even looked at her. And like the workers, the girl waited for something that was not destined.

I looked at the overhead projector. It read, "Bragan 25,403-03 per cent, Anderson 176,217-97 per cent, 41 per cent precincts."

I walked around yet still. This time I recognized three TV newscasters. One was giving his report to ABC national news. I thought, "gee, people from coast to coast just saw me walk by." I then noticed more people from local TV news stations.

I found a seat near the ABC news desk, and I sat down. There I saw another ashtray. This one had cigarette butts rigid with the remnants of red lipstick. I smiled and laughed. I thought, "Yes, these workers' hearts are bleeding like the cigarette butts with red lipstick stains."

My own heart was pounding after I read and reread the overhead projector now. It said something different that overwhelmed my mind. I read, "three use heart, the message remains."

I asked my friend to give me his cigarette before he put it out.

I took it. And instead of putting it out in the ashtray, I extinguished it out on the ballroom floor and said, "Let's go home."

Losing campaign leaves impression on writer

Well, it's that time of year again. Financial arrangements for the next academic year are being made. And once again students are faced with the possibility of a 5 percent tuition increase.

The proposed increase, which would supposedly keep pace with education, would raise tuition from the current $18 per semester hour to $19 per hour. Harper's revenue comes from three main sources: state reimbursements, taxes and tuition. And since tuition is the only source that can be directly controlled

What appears to be the best alternative for Harper's educational system is not the best alternative for its students. Since state reimbursements cannot be depended upon and taxes cannot be increased without a referendum, it seems that the only alternative left is presenting the voters with a referendum to determine the tuition rates.

Yes, a referendum was held last fall and yes, it failed. However, the voting took place during a time when voters took on an overall negative view of tax increases, due partly to tax situations in California. But, if a referendum were held with virtually no outside publicity and Harper students and faculty, shall unit, there would be 20,000+ voters involved. Certainly enough to vote in the students' favor.

The referendum held last fall only proposed a 7.5 cent per $100 assessed valuation tax increase, not exactly an overwhelming amount. While the community would be footing part of the bill, it would also be benefiting. The purpose of a community college is to provide a college which every one could afford and a few extra dollars on the tax bill would keep tuition from skyrocketing. Thus, more would be able to afford Harper.

A referendum would let the community pay a bit more and still enjoy the benefits of a community college. But, without one the college student would simply be stuck with an unfair increase.

Chicagoan talks about his music

by NANCY KARABOTOS

"Chicago has the absolute greatest music scene of anywhere I've ever been," says Corky Siegel, a native Chicagoan who appeared in concert here Friday, March 14. "Chicago, however, is a city without a major music industry," Siegel said, "as the musicians don't worry about getting a possible deal. The music is for themselves." The music industry is a money industry, and the money is in New York and Los Angeles. But where do the trends come from? "Trends are created by the industry, not by the public or the musicians," Siegel remarked. "It's sort of like the stock market. If you see a stock dropping, everybody wants to pull out, and so much for that trend."

Siegel fits well into the folk music group—no hard rock, no electric sounds. He plays what he likes to play and tries to avoid pressures from the industry and fans. "If I coincidentally am going to play something that sounds like punk rock or new wave, that's fine. I don't object to it. I just don't think in those terms."

But what the audience thinks can be totally different. Corky usually plans a set before going on stage, but must be prepared to change the program at any time. "The only time I'll ever change my set because of audience reaction," he explained, "is if the audience seems to be real rowdy and the soft stuff will just get lost in the noise." He believes that the more physically exciting the music is, the more physical reaction he'll get.

Siegel said he'd rather play to an audience of four hundred for the effect, but to an audience of ten thousand for the money. "If I have an opportunity to make money, why not," he said.

Siegel is presently playing the college circuit. From here he goes to Minnesota and Iowa. "In terms of playing different kinds of colleges and different places, they're all the same to me," he said. "I think college students accept my music because I make it available. I don't think it has anything to do with what I'm playing or the quality. It's available."

The first record company Siegel signed with was Vanguard in 1969. Since then he has signed with RCA and Deutsche Grammophon. He's toured much of the United States and was recently asked to tour Japan.

In addition to writing and touring, Corky Siegel has worked with Arthur Fiedler on many occasions. Fiedler liked a piece that Corky was doing and asked him to perform and record with him. "It was a really wonderful challenge," Corky said. "He was high-spirited, irritable, and he's an old fuddy-duddy. I just used to laugh at him, so we got along pretty good." Siegel wrote arrangements for a song for Fiedler, but it was "a little more sophisticated than just background."

Corky has two basic suggestions for others who want to enter the world of music. First, he says, enjoy yourself. And secondly, be persistent in the arena of business. "Separate your art from your business," he advises. "They are two different arts, the art of making music and the art of selling your music. You won't be successful unless you are an artist at selling your music." Siegel believes no musician is better than another. He would not offer a top choice list of influential artists. "They all have something different to offer," he said. And so does Corky Siegel. He pulled out a bottle of bubbles and demonstrated one of his many talents.

If the presidential election was held today, who would you vote for?

 Gerry Ross "ANDERSON HERE is a better choice than Reagan. Reagan's too old for the presidency. Carter I disagree with completely because of the things he's done so far. Kennedy and Bush are not as likable. There's too much in the past to be used against them later."	 Tom Maffei "REAGAN here's the one who has been going wrong for him in his age. # Much more than a speech teacher

Dr. John Muchmore, professor of speech enjoys the accomplishments of his children, "saw" know marriage pit and going down long hills on a bike. "That's a gas," Muchmore who has taught at Harper thirteen years, taught in grade schools for nine years.

He enjoys teaching at Harper and enjoys listening to the students speeches. "I learn a great deal from what students bring to the class. They have had experiences I could never have. One guy gave a speech about how he wanted to go around the world and three months later I got a postcard from him. He was in New Zealand," Muchmore said.

One woman who was going to have an operation gave a "moving" speech about discovering the importance of living each day. "Everyone was in tears at the end," he said.

On the other extreme, "The first year the college opened, one guy talked about pigs and his defense of the animal. It was the funniest thing I heard in my life. I was beside myself."

His own college memories are positive. "I was fortunate to have had so many good professor. One teacher was excited about teaching one at Northwestern was excited about people and one was excited about things' Learning is a great experience," Muchmore said.

Muchmore started his undergraduate work in Denver but shifted to Communications and Public Address in his sixth year. "I really don't know why I got into this field. It's just a fascinating way of study of the personal and social ways. The humans."

If Muchmore didn't pursue a Speech Communications career, he probably would have been drawn toward Law, which he finds "incredibly fascinating," or Speech Pathology. In his time away from teaching, Muchmore likes to read. His favorite books are "Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance." "It's an interesting treatment of motorcycle maintenance, striving for perfection," Muchmore said. One of his favorite authors is Tom Wolfe.

Muchmore has co-written a book, himself, on Speech Communication. He worked on it for 1 1/2 years. The second edition came out last Spring.

Another of Muchmore's interests is jogging. "Three years ago after Easter I was feeling terribly fat and I started running. It's been on an off since then, but if you put it in the crutch I'll have to start again. I was jogging for six months when it became a bigger threat to my health when I ran at night. I stopped."

He also has an organ "which I play very badly," he said.

Asked if he ever wanted to change his name, Muchmore said, "There were moments when I used to want to, but I've gotten used to it. I've put up with the jokes," he said, and much more.

ALBUMS

Don't pass by the $.99 albums

I like to look around for a good deal (they) when shopping for records. Many of you I'm sure, are familiar with the cut-out sections of your favorite record stores.

"Cameo," are usually 99 cents to $2.99 in price. They are sometimes found in big department stores and the corner drug stores.

You would be surprised at the amount of good quality records which are available.

The records found in the cut-out or budget bins sections of the stores are most likely overstock records. But, in most every case the record is there because the record company is a potential hit. So, in this case the company had many hits made, but the hit did not sell to the public. The company then releases the hit for a cheaper price to rack-jobs and in the stores. In other words supply outstripped demand.

The first four of my recommendations are the solo hits released by the rock group Yes. Chris Squire "Fish Out of Water," is one of the better hits of the solo projects. The other three "Solo," "Hold On Your Hand," and "Lucky," are very fine works of the band's player's diverse style of classical rock. Square incorporates orchestral hits and choros to accompany his band.

Jan Anderson, "Oasis of San Hondo," a story of a planet in the future which after three million years of a nuclear energy sends three men searching for a new planet. The story is fascinating, the last paragraph ends like this "and so in parting Glen, Barnart,

Moods for Moderns

by MIKE SIMULS

and Quagga climbed to the highest mountain, lying down with eyes fixed on the stars. Seeing only the stars, they again became one with the universe and drifted away towards the Sun." This hit is very good and is a short story in the science fiction realm. But, the amazing fact of this project is that Anderson played all instruments, produced, directed, and recorded the entire project by himself.

"Pat Moran, 'I,'" is another science fiction short story. This is a story of a hotel that offers to people a place where they can experience or enjoy their impossible dreams. But, after going through this process of dreams, the person must rise in the floors of the building. And when this person reaches the top floor, he must then jump off the building. Great. Until one day, something happens Moran's electronic work is that of the Yes element. He also seems to have a very Brazilian percussiveness to the hit.

Steve Howe, "Beginnings" is a culmination of material Howe had, that Yes never used.

Howe's classical guitar and pedal steel makes the hit good. If you liked Yes at all you would like this hit, mainly for the instrumental tracks.

The next three hits I would recommend are from the group Iota.

Iota, "How Dare You," features songs like "I'm Mandy, Fly Me," a song about a poster girl calling you to fly with her to the advertised vacationland. "Lazy Days," a contemporary song about youth. "Art for Art's Sake," another contemporary piece about every art form where money is concerned. All of the music done in excellent studio technique.

Iota, "The Original Sound-track," is the album featuring the classic hit "I'm Not in Love." This song is the prime example of just how good one may sound in the studio. It is said that Iota recorded the chorus for "I'm Not in Love" at times for the sound of a full chorus.

The next hit was on my top ten of the 1970's. The Sex Pistols' "Never Mind the Bollocks Here's the Sex Pistols," is a classic hit that should be in every record collector's record collection. I can not stress how important this album is. With songs like "Bodies," "Holidays in the Sun," "Anarchy in the U.K.," "God Save the Queen," "EMI," the group transcends the working class people fervor, which was evident in Britain and still is today.

In "Holidays," the screaming lyrics is just one indication of how mad these guys were. The lyrics say, "I don't want a holiday in the sun, I wanna go in the Sun. I wanna see some history. Cause I got a reasonable economy. Now I get a reason and I'm still waiting at the Berlin wall. N'seesurround sound in a two-inch wall, I was waiting for the continent call, didn't ask for sunshine and I got WW III, I looked over the wall and they looked back at me. They're staring all night, they're staring all day, I had no reason to be here at all. But now I got a reason to be at the Berlin Wall. Paranoia - when will we fall, claustrophobia too many clients, cheap dialog, cheap essential scenery, I wanna go over the Berlin wall. A CHEAP HOLIDAY IN OTHER PEOPLE'S MISERY."

Each song's an argument with the establishment's view of life. Each song's violent in the loud neo-stop music.

The Sex Pistols violent anger destroying the English music scene, while spurring on new wave bands which are quite popular today. But, the violence the band encouraged cut them dearly, for it became their end. Check out the budget bins when you get a chance. I saw today another class hit, the Beatles' "Let It Be." But, at today's price, $1.99 for any of the above hits, is like buying the one cent gumballs when you were a kid, you couldn't or can't go wrong.

Student astrologer advised to join the peace corp

"Julia: I am currently studying astrology through an adult continuing education program. I've already made my chart but I'm learning how to interpret the planetary aspects. Would you please do my chart and tell me what careers would be best for me? I am particularly interested in finding out if the travel business might be a good field for me. Thanks."

You appear to others as an open-minded, intellectual and outgoing person. You can be aggressive at times, yet you are sensitive to the demands and needs of others. You have a lot of fire in you, giving you an endless source of enthusiasm, inspiration and a love for challenge and excitement.

Your chart indicates that you may have a slightly dual nature: one part of you seeking security, solidarity and comfort, the other part needing freedom, adventure, power and control. Because of this duality, you may tend to scatter or misdirect your energies. For this reason, it is important for you to find an environment that provides you with independence, mobility, and a lot of variety, in order for you to be able to best express yourself.

Astro Awareness

by JULIE REALY

You seem to have a lot of ambition, and this highlights the strong leadership and management potential within you. Thus, along with your ability to deal well with people as a professional, basic can surely lead you to enjoy many accomplishments throughout your life. It also gives you the possibility of excelling in almost any field of work that you choose.

At this point, I feel that it is very important to mention that you seem to have a deep emotional need to dedicate your working efforts and talents to social welfare. You can naturally cultivate an awareness for the intellectual understanding of solutions to many of the problems that plague today's society. You have much to contribute, and I highly recommend for you to keep this consideration in mind.

Law, government, diplomacy, medicine, physical therapy, and rehabilitation for the handicapped are excellent fields for you to channel your best talents through import and exporting business, purchasing, research enterprises, public relations and also the travel business. If you are especially interested in would definitely be successful for you although they may not bring you quite as much satisfaction as the latter fields. While exploring the different careers, keep in mind to check what opportunities may be available through welfare organizations such as Vista, Peace Corps, UNICEF, etc., that would give you a chance to fulfill your emotional needs and provide travel at the same time.

Regardless of what you choose to pursue, your chart does not show indicating of distant travel sometime throughout your life whether through work or pleasure; and someday you will undoubtedly reach a responsible position of prominence. Good Luck.

Spector crosses Ramones path

Their paths were destined to cross. They needed each other's resources. They have met, two singer sounds have united and the product has been dubbed "End of the Century" and it's been created by the Ramones and producer/guide/producer Phil Spector. This LP is something new for both the brewer, powerfully basic Ramones and master of melodic production, Phil Spector. The sweetest result of this meeting is that it produced a true "Fashion" Ramones album, not, as some have feared a mushy, over-dubbed, Spectorized album. After practically kicking radio airplay in the teeth, apparently spurning conventional success the Ramones have realized that compromise and conformity aren't necessary for success. They achieved their sub-culture hero status by their stinging contempt and off-kilter bits against standard big time rock n' roll radio, sort of a "biting the hand that feeds" situation. These guys are the American punk, our own domestic brand of disrespect. The boys have shown some true heads up musical maturity on "End of the Century", not only did they get Spector to produce it, but more importantly they expanded, broadened their scope. This is a genuinely commendable feat after witnessing the great crash and burn late that not many of the Ramones punk contemporaries. The Ramones had one way out... they took it and it sounds great.

The subtly with which Phil Spector exercises his arid mastery confirms his talent, he draws the best from the Ramones. I'm not saying Spector is the only reason for this solid LP, but he was the helping hand the Ramones needed as they crashed their way into the 80s. The method of composition is as much a part of craft as the content and it's the combination of the Ramones and Spector that we hear. There is plenty of over-dubbing, but so well mixed it still sounds like the Ramones. It's still their album.

This is the Ramones' best effort to revolutionize the sound waves in the U.S. There are a couple of very radio worthy tunes here on "End of the Century", probably their easiest album to listen to so far. "Do You Remember Rock n' Roll" is the flagship of this fleet of tunes, it sets the precedent for the Ramones in the next decade. The last years for the days of smash hits from Spector's "Bonnie", "Crystal" etc. Bullabulab, Shindig and Alan Freed were the last icons of rock n' roll for the Ramones. As Jan and Dean and the Beach Boys revolutionized rock n' roll in the early 60s the Ramones hope for the same in the 80s, not with fire and fury as was the case in England's rebellion. Instead, they'll alter things with relative innocence and some clean-cut wit in the 1980 rock n' roll fashion. "I'm Afraid" and "I Can't Make It on Time" demonstrates Joey's surprising vocal ability, he is aggressive, sensitive and purposeful all at once, vaguely reminding Gary Pop. Jimmy Ramones slips in some good guitar riffs on the rooky "Rock n' Roll High School", recorded here from the film of the same name. They cover "Chinese Rock" by the tough rock Heartbreakers and do "All the Way" both solid tunes. The only real bummer on the whole LP is "Baby I Love You", a sassy string polluted cover of the Koolhaas.

The Ramones just may be one step ahead, and if this is to be the music that alters the playlists of our radio stations, it'll be the first guy to get a WLS T-shirt. Who knows, maybe AM radio will become something more than just listening to Vince and Lou do the Cubs games during the best of summer.

Uphill battle for Anderson

 giving up. He is basing his entire campaign on the slogan, "The Anderson difference," meaning that he is the only GOP candidate, who can win against a Democratic opponent in November. Lately, however, the Anderson difference has not been focused on the issues, but on personalities. Should Anderson re-gear his campaign to the issues and not the personalities, he would be sure to pick up more support.

There are two other important factors in Anderson's possibilities of getting the Republican nomination - Bush and former President Gerald Ford.

Ford's decision not to run is a definite sigh of relief in Anderson supporters, because Ford, a native of Michigan, has his strong hold in the Midwest, and could take more support away from him and Bush than Reagan.

Finally, there is George Bush. The man who won the Iowa caucus. The man who had "Big Boy" on his side heading into New Hampshire and Massachusetts. But "Big Boy" proved to be a flake friend to Bush, as it might very well be to Reagan. Should Bush continue his downslide, it would be to the advantage of Anderson, but how much so?

If Bush decides to drop out of the race altogether, Anderson might certainly be able to garner some of the Bush supporters. Because of Anderson's poor party image, however, it seems likely that Reagan would reap more support from a Bush pull-out than Anderson.

The key to the Republican campaign will inevitably be in the west, where Reagan has staunch support, but where Anderson is repeatedly picking up support.

Music Review

'The Knack pay for the Money'

Have you ever wondered "Who gave that group a record contract?" That's what I keep saying about the new Knack album "The Little Girls Understand." I can't believe the Knack were contracted to do 40 single let alone release their second album.

I can say one really nice thing about the album. And that is that the cellophane shrink wrap is so clear and appealing that it happens to be the only worthwhile item in the package. The cover is worthless. With linear notes like "This record is very dear to me and my bank manager." I am left breathless. That statement says it all.

The Knack have no sound of their own. They imitate sounds of the Beatles, Buddy Holly, Phil Spector and Rowells and the Rolling Stones. Unlike the many new bands which are surfacing, the Knack have no original ideas.

The Knack, in their song "Can I Put A Price On Love" will leave you scratching your head and saying, "When did I hear that?" And it will dawn on you, the Stones' "Beast of Burden" sounds alarming like "Can I Put A Price On Love", even though the Stones wrote "Burden" two years ago.

Freshmen will play big roles for Harper baseball

by MIKE BAMBACH

This is not the kind of team Harper baseball coach, Wally Reynolds would like to have. Not that this is a bad team, it is "just not a team you can count on."

Reynolds, however, is very optimistic about the Hawks' chances in the 1980 NAC conference race.

This is a young team (11 freshmen and 19 sophomores) and Reynolds knows his team will only go as far as the freshmen carry it.

Harper's pitching rotation will be most affected by freshmen. "If a couple of our pitchers get hurt, we'll be in trouble," said Reynolds.

Art Avermann, Pat Bestmeyer, Bob Slawinski, and Dan Dowajka will be the four "youth" hurlers Reynolds will depend upon the most.

Avermann, won the Bob Felzer Award last summer while pitching for Burlington's American Legion team. Bestmeyer, meanwhile, was Midwest-South All-Conference pitcher with Rolling Meadows last season.

It is Slawinski, however, who Reynolds is the most high on. "He works hard. He's sneaky fast and has good potential. He should be one of our top two pitchers by the season's end," said Reynolds, who is making his debut as Harper's baseball coach.

Reynolds can also turn to pitcher Chris Jensen. Jensen, a returned from last year's 15-13 season, pitched 26 and two-thirds innings, winning two of six games with an earned run average of 5.73. Jensen also made All-NAC conference second team - but not as a pitcher, but at third base, where he hit .264 and a team-leading four home runs. Jensen, however, is not listed as an infielder, but as an outfielder.

"One problem we have is that we're starting seven infielders," said Reynolds, alluding to Jensen, Brian Sanders, a natural third baseman, and Doug Ahrens, a returning first baseman from last year's squad.

Reynolds has one natural outfielder, Cameron Moore, a graduate of Conant High School, hit well above the bat mark as a junior. Between his junior and senior years, however, Moore underwent knee surgery and his batting average fell to a poor .156.

Reynolds, though, remains very high on Moore. "He's got a dynamic arm and excellent outfielding fundamentals. He hits for power and if we can keep his strikeouts down he'll be super."

Behind the plate are Jim Berg and Russ Wieser. Wieser is another returner from last year's team. He hit .300 while making the NAC All-Conference second-team Berg, a graduate of St. Viator, transferred from Creighton, where he won for his freshman year.

"I have confidence in both of them," said Reynolds. "They both do different things well. It's important they take control of our young pitchers."

Harper's infield is not set, as Reynolds is trying different combinations. "I'm looking at the nucleus for the infield, though looks something like this: Jim Mize, another returner from last year who joined Jensen and Wieser on the NAC All-

BATTER UP. A Harper baseball player gets in a few cuts in the batting cage during practice. The team is still practicing inside due to the wonderful Illinois weather. Conference second team. Mize led the team in hitting last year with a .460 average, 14 doubles, 37 hits, and 20 runs scored. Tim Maloney, a Forest View graduate, at second base. Maloney hit .411 for the Falcons last spring. "He's a very aggressive player," says Reynolds. "He hates to lose. He'll slide into a lead of balls with the winning run." - Ron Laramie, who teamed with Maloney on Forest View's double play combo last year. "Fundamentally, he knows the game very well," said Reynolds. "Bill Moran, a six-foot-four third baseman from Rolling Meadows. "He's got good hands and he's very fluid for a big guy," said Reynolds. Frank Serrillo, an Elk Grove graduate, has impressed Reynolds with his glove. "He's a super defensive player who can play second base, third base, or short stop. He also turns the double-play very well," said Reynolds.

Ken Bookman and Mike Salazar will join Serrillo in reserve. Overall, Reynolds will be disappointed if the Hawks don't win the NAC title. But, he admits, "The school from River Grove (Trivium) is the team to beat."

Wrestlers return home to Harper empty-handed

by WAYNE REEDEAU

Norm Lovelace thought he'd have some good news when he came back from the National Wrestling Meet in Worthington, Massachusetts.

But as it turned out, Lovelace kept pretty quiet when asked about the performance of his five wrestlers, and he said, by a reason. Winless.

"In the 150-pound division, Jay Evans won his first match, only to be beaten the next round by the eventual champion in that division."

"Dan Weber nearly made it to the medal round in the 150-pound class, but Weber, says Lovelace, "was simply beaten by a better wrestler."

"I-D. Leggett found himself doing some early sparring after losing his first encounter 5-3 in the 165-pound classification.

"Rodney McWhirter 'did well,' according to Lovelace, but also dropped out of the race after a match or two.

"Jeff Nickel, who took over for 175-pound Ed Broderick late in the season and won numerous matches in that class, also found himself with nothing but a handshake and a slap on the back."

In fact, NAC Conference teams put on their worst showing in years, according to Lovelace, with Joliet, DuPage and Harper all barely making a scratch in the national competition.

"The tournament was dominated by the Michigan and Ohio schools for some reason," said Lovelace dejectedly. "We tried, but you can't make a quarter horse out of a mole. "Cheer up, boys. Get up and sooner or later talent wins out. That's what happened here (at the tournament) if you ask me."

Lovelace said he expected Jay Evans and Dan Weber to do much better than they did, and cites Weber's recent marriage as a possible factor for his performance.

Lovelace felt disappointed about the tournament but rationalized that "there's always next year."

The coach said that he's had offers from various area colleges but doesn't plan on leaving Harper's wrestling program. "I'm happy here," he said, "so why should I leave?"

Student Trustee vote this week

Three students have filed petitions to run for Student Trustee. The student trustee election will be held this Tuesday and Wednesday in A building at the College Center Lounge from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. The three candidates, Carver Turpin, Buddy Berg and John Malowski will be running to fill the seat of current Student Trustee Bruce Zenas. Zenas's term expires April 15th.

Turpin, who is enrolled in the Business degree program, said,

"I feel I would make a responsible student trustee because of the activities I have been engaged in in the last year. During this time, I have had the opportunity to meet fellow students and have heard from and come on many of the campus issues. I feel I can well represent the student body and reveal this to the trustees and administration.

Turpin listed among her qualifications, Program Board president, Cultural Arts Committee, WHCM disk-jockey, Game Room attendant and Student Activities Budget Committee.

Tomchek, who is in the transfer program, said in his petition, "Since my elementary school days, I have been politically involved on school issues. My involvement here at Harper has sparked even more interest. I am currently involved in 21 semester hours and am looking forward to a law degree.

"I have participated in Harper's Touring Children's Theater and the musical "Cops and Dills." I also attended the Illinois State University speech tournament earlier in the year and have been chosen to produce a summer variety show here at Harper. Running for student trustee will give me the experience I need to attain my future goals, and if chosen, will prove to be a rewarding experience."

Malowski, who is enrolled in the engineering program, is also a 22-year-old veteran. "I was discharged with an honorable discharge with a rank of E-5. I believe," said Malowski in his petition, "with that past experience, plus my organization of the engineering club, that I would be well-qualified to hold this important position.

"I'm not afraid to stand up or speak for what I feel is a necessity. I also enjoy communication and working for people."

Tomchek calls for close scrutiny of activities budget

by WENDY WINKELHAKE

The Student Activity Budget has recently come under fire of Board of Trustees Member David Tomchek.

Tomchek, at the March Board of Trustees meeting, said he wants to bring the account under more careful scrutiny of the board.

Currently, there is the Student Activity budget which provides funds for the various club programs and activities offered at Harper. The salaries of Fred Waters, student activity advisor, and of the night time student aide come from this fund.

However, salaries of Jean Pankann and various club and organization sponsors are taken from the college's education fund, tax money earmarked for teacher salaries and education programs.

"What I'm saying is that we should put this all together in one place where it can be more carefully scrutinized," explained Tomchek.

Tomchek also said he wants to give taxpayers a clearer picture of what is going on with the budgeting of funds. "I'm not totally sure that taxpayers should be supporting student activities. The decision to do that should be made consciously by board members," he said. "It has been a policy of Harper to take a certain amount of its tax revenue and put it towards student activities. I'm not sure I agree. My main objection in the past has been that when the board does it, they don't really see what they are doing" because the money is not noted as going for student activities, he said.

Tomchek added that he sees no reason why the student activity budgeting is not part of the same budgeting cycle the rest falls into.

The cycle Tomchek referred to is the budgeting cycle held every spring for the following academic year.

Each spring a budget proposal is brought to the board. The board then goes over the proposal allocations and calls for possible cutbacks. Tomchek said this process is usually completed sometime in July.

"The student activity budget should be synchronized with the college budgeting," Tomchek said. "I gather that Dr. (George) Dasher is beginning to see the wisdom of my suggestion." he remarked. He also sees some support from the finance committee chairman.

Dasher could not be reached for comment.

factor in school budgeting. "I'm running on a platform of scrutiny," he added. Tomchek is currently running for a second term of office on the board of trustees.

"At this point, I feel that we are complying with the policies and procedures established by the board. We do everything we can to provide additional information and answer the questions of board members. We make every attempt to do that," said Don Starnesky, vice president of academic affairs.

"I'm really cautious about assuming the board is in any way I can, to answer questions on anything that I can," said Starnesky.

Jeanne Pankann, director of student activities, said she does not wish to take a position on the issue Tomchek has raised. "It's not appropriate for me as an administrator to take public opposition to a board member," said Ms. Pankann.

Tomchek said he feels that he may be getting on some support from the board. "I gather that Dr. (George) Dasher is beginning to see the wisdom of my suggestion," he remarked. He also sees some support from the finance committee chairman.

Dasher could not be reached for comment.

It's finally come to this. We have a columnist game to war against the students.

Oh, not that they don't accuse it. But they finally got to Mike Simkus.

If you've been in town for the past 10 or so days, allow me to brief you on the no-lose-but-battle between Simkus and Harper's student body.

For two whole semesters, he has been teased, persecuted, ridiculed and hated. "So what," says one student. "Har's —" —, (captioned deleted).

Until I answered the phone last week to the death threat to "that guy Simkus." I, too, could have cared less. I was concerned with my social life, work, and school (gotta have cash for my money).

Then I realized how strained relations had become with the students and "that guy named Simkus."

When I heard an overcast voice tell how he had attempted to "disappear" of Simkus, I thought it was another of many I could never reveal practical joke. I laughed to relieve some of the tension between the voice and his (at least it sounded like a him) name.

When he demanded to talk to Simkus, however, I realized the joking was over. This person wanted Simkus — and it wasn't to invite him to a party.

I saw Mike the next day. He said nothing for many moments (which is rare). He finally looked at me and said, "I can't take any more of this said."

I told him not to take it out on the students. "Don't take it out on the students," I see. Had you, I said so "because they don't know any better."

Wow! Did I say a mouthful. I never realized how something so simple and yet so profound could escape this adolescent mind.

I've always believed those who reacted to Mike's column to be on the level of a rejected Karma Consciousness freak. Now I know I was right.

A tall lanky guy later walked up to Mike and said, "I think your column stinks." Another walked by me and said, "I hate your column."

And now I ask you, the students, who the hell are you?"

You sure as hell aren't as lovable as some have been led to think. When, and only when, you become an editor of a newspaper will we listen to you.

It isn't easy to battle students. It isn't fun and it isn't necessary. And yet, one feels the need to lash out at pure ignorance, although nothing can penetrate the cerebral fog of some of the students I have met.

It is not all and maybe no more than a select few who have earned the reactions of Mike Simkus.

Someone once said "I think it was my mommy! That you can't go down to another person's level to make a point. I certainly must say I've tried, and my money was right — I couldn't touch the level some of the students are at with an elevator.

Excluding my girlfriend (except I there is not one person I know who hasn't at one time or another commented about "that guy named Simkus." Even my mother, who will always remain sacred in my heart, has pointed out how odd Mike comes across in his column. Believe me, I know how odd Mike comes across in his column. After all, how many guys would pick-up and go to New York City to the middle of a school day? Who else would write about music to play at a wedding (and his follow-up at what to play at a divorce)?

Simkus' odd behavior lends to his personality as a columnist. "He's a freak," said one of my friends after reading one of Mike's columns. "I wouldn't trust that guy with my wife," continued my friend, "and I'm not even married."

I don't think his 'gals' was funny either. But this is typical of the attitude I have confronted when discussing "that guy Simkus."

So if one day you wake-up and find your security blanket has been dirtied on, don't blame "that guy Simkus," blame yourself. After all, you did it.

Trustee elections demand undivided voter attention

With visions of sandy beaches and sunny days dancing in some heads, most people seem to have forgotten a very important election scheduled during break: the Harper Board of Trustee elections.

With four seats open, this election could make or break Harper. Special interest groups could work their way into things and totally rearrange policies and fundamental beliefs already established for Harper. This is why it is so extremely important for eligible voters to exercise their voting privileges.

Students should band together and throw their support behind the candidate of their choice. At the same time, teachers union can sway the election with their support.

Not only students and faculty members, but the Harper community should become active in this election also. Taxes partially support Harper and all programs here are open to the community. Thus, the community vote should resound throughout the election.

Students should at least become active in voting for the Student Trustee. The Student Trustee holds a regular seat on the board and should be the voice that reports student views to the board. But without careful scrutiny by the student voters, their voice could go unheard in any decision making.

The absolute importance of this election and the vital role of the voter, whether student, teacher or community member, in the blocking of any special groups which could threaten Harper can never be stressed enough.

People can vote and attempt to maintain or improve the status quo, or they can pay the possible consequences later.

Students 'Fonda' Spring speaker

DAVIS, CA (CPB) — The University of California-Davis law school has done what the University of California-Davis medical school refused to do: hire James Fonda as its commencement speaker.

The law school's decision to name Fonda was a surprise because the university's new school rejected Fonda despite widespread support from the school's students.

Last September more students nominated Fonda for spring commencement speaker than any other nominee. Before a vote on the nominations could be taken, however, speaker committee chairman Barbara Stewart removed Fonda's name from the ballot. Stewart "felt there may be some question of Fonda's acceptability," and school spokeswoman Vicki Salto said as of the time.

Stewart's action prompted actor Alan Alda to accuse administrators of black-balling, and to remove his own name from the list of possible commencement speakers.

Ironically, Fonda was not the law school's first choice. Former U.S. Ambassador Andrew Young and former Congressman Barbara Jordan were invited before Fonda, but declined.

New 'Child Development Program'

by WENDY WINKELBAKE

No, that cute little play-ground between Bldgs. J and J is not for Harper dropouts.

It is part of the new child care facilities housed in Bldg. 1127 and 1131.

The facility has its own kitchen, classroom, washroom facilities, attached play area and two way mirrors to allow students and parents to view the children during various activities — far better than the former facility housed in a renovated classroom of Bldg. 10.

Lynn Ehsen, service manager of the child learning center, feels that the new facility allows for a more flexible curriculum with the atmosphere provided in the new facility.

"We have an excellent program comparable to those of outside preschools," stated Jane Thomas, who handles the academic side of the program. "It's a more quality learning environment."

Formerly, the Child Care Program (a babysitting service for parents on campus) and the Child Development Program (the academic program training students as teachers) were totally divorced from each other. Now, both programs fall under the title of 'Child Development Program. The curriculum in both phases remains the same; the only difference is that preschool children come for morning or afternoon sessions whereas child care tots are present as long as their parent is on campus.

Although the facility provided much more space for them, the children were a bit skeptical about moving to the new building. "At first they asked when they get to go back to the other facility; it didn't feel like home to them," explained Mrs. Thomas. These feelings were soon forgotten and the tots are comfortably settled into their new "home."

This new home had a complete kitchen facility which allows many practical cooking activities. The children get to help in the preparation of salads, soups, cookies, etc. and then reap the benefits.

The two way mirror allows parents and students needing "observation time" to view their children during the day's activities.

"We are going to have listening carrels put in and microphones placed in appropriate places around the room. People will be able to tune into a specific part of the room," commented Mrs. Thomas.

The only tear to be found in the place is the play area. Due to a misinterpretation of building plans the fence enclosing the area is too short. Any little adventure seeker who got too adventurous near the fence would face a 12 foot drop to solid concrete. However, money has been appropriated for rebuilding and Mrs. Thomas assumes it will be completed in one month.

Individual attention is given to each child enrolled in the program. There are a maximum of 20 children in each of the classes with a teacher, aided by three students leading the program.

The classroom aspect of the program is designed to encourage curiosity, exploration and problem solving in a warm, affectionate atmosphere. Resource people from the community are frequent visitors to the classroom and walk to places of interest on campus highlight some days.

These experiences expose the children in math, science, social studies, creative art, dramatic play, music, movement and language arts.

Children also learn about the intellectual (what is the world like?), social (their relationship to parents, teachers and peers) emotional (how to positively express their feelings) physical (what to do with their senses) and creative (how to express who they are and what they feel) aspects of life.

"It's a different, fulfilling experience for them," commented Mrs. Ehsen.

The small, toy stashed chairs and tables, the storybooks and the toys found in the center are enough to make one want to return to those simple childhood days where one's biggest concern was where the green crayon was rather than the "grown up" days of college and worrying where the research paper due next week will come from.

"It's one big happy family here," concluded Mrs. Ehsen.

OKAY CHILDREN, today we will be discussing Einstein's theory of relativity. We may even get through to his theory of black holes. Now, doesn't that sound like fun. (Photos by Lori Lynn Goy)

Tutoring

Free tutoring is provided for any enrolled student who requests such aid. Approximately 26 student tutors and four Teacher Associates provide help in over 60 course areas. Most tutoring is arranged on an appointment basis, but some walk-in help is available.

Tutors generally work one-on-one, although some subject areas allow for small group instruction. The first meeting with a tutor is usually for an hour during which time the student's problems are explained and identified. Thereafter, the student may continue to see the tutor for one-half hour weekly, or may choose to make appointments when necessary.

Employment

Students interested in being employed as peer counselors during the 1980-81 academic year should pick up an application in any one of the three counseling centers on campus (ASH, D&H, D177) and return it to one of these centers by April 15. Peer counselors are paid according to the Harper College Student Aide wage scale and work approximately 10 hours per week. Students who are selected will have the opportunity to work with the opportunity to work more than this during the summer. It is also possible to arrange receive academic credit rather than a salary.

Peer counselors are students who assist the Student Development staff in a variety of counseling-related functions and who serve as liaisons between the Student Development staff and Harper students. Before assuming that responsibility, peer counselors will complete a short training program which will be co-ordinated by Frances Bramley and Bruce Bolver, who share peer counseling coordination responsibilities.

Artist Lecture

Artist Judy Johnson Rende will present a free guest lecture and slide show on her work on Wednesday. The lecture is scheduled for 1 p.m. in Bldg. C204.

Art Exhibition

Harper College will also sponsor an exhibition of Rende's drawings open to the public from April 5-22 in Bldgs. C and P from 9:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday; 9:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. on Friday, and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday.

Feeling okay today?

There has been a 30 percent rise in new cases of tuberculosis since 1970-1979 according to statistics gathered by the Suburban Cook County Tuberculosis Sanitarium District.

Persons with positive skin tests have been seen in the Harper Health Service, as well as in the local high schools. In addition, an active case of tuberculosis has been diagnosed in one of the local high schools.

At present, tuberculosis screening is required for Harper food service and child care employees, students enrolled in the nursing, dental hygiene, medical office management, statistic technician, operating room technician and food service programs as well as students participating in intercollegiate athletics. In addition, students presently enrolled in English as a second language course are voluntarily participating in the screening.

In response to the reported rise, both in cases of tuberculosis and in persons with positive skin tests, members of the college community are being asked to participate in tuberculosis screening. The process is without charge and involves the following:

Come to the Harper Health Service, A 302 anytime between 8:15 a.m. and 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday and from 8:15 a.m. to 10 p.m. on Friday.

Request a tuberculin skin test.

If the test is positive, a referral will be made for an x-ray at no charge.

A positive skin test does not necessarily indicate a person has tuberculosis, but can mean that the body has come in contact with the tubercle bacillus and has built up an antibody to the germ.

If in a good idea to be tested annually, either by x-ray test or chest x-ray.

Chicken soup and...

By LIZ McCAY
Health Services Director

Spring is almost here, but winter's worst monsters, colds and flu, are still with us. Most people refuse to believe that they are the best person to care for a cold or flu, we run to our doctors in hopes that they will be able to offer us an instant cure.

Since most colds and flu are viral infections, penicillin and other antibiotics are of no use and can sometimes cause complications. Neither will Vitamin C cure a cold.

How can a person tell if he "suffering" is a cold or the flu? Colds often start with sneezing, runny nose, sore throat, and "watery" eyes followed by pain, tiredness, and occasionally a slight fever or cough.

Flu may give any or all of the above symptoms, and possibly stomach problems. In addition, fever might be higher and a sufferer could have leg or abdominal pain. Flu can keep a person in bed for days or can be very mild.

A person can spend a lot of money on cold and flu remedies. The choice of products at a local drug store will "waggle" the mind. Read the labels and select one to suit your symptoms. Most cold preparations have a combination of drugs used for multiple symptoms. Some products have antihistamines and decongestants which may or may not help.

The Food and Drug Administration called upon a group of research specialists to demonstrate the value of non-prescription drugs and proved that nothing available will cure or shorten the course of a cold or flu.

The best treatment for cold and flu is still the same: aspirin and fluids. If a person is allergic to aspirin, he should substitute acetaminophen (Tylenol). Fluids are important; the body requires more fluids if there is a fever. Fluids also help make mucous more fluid. Vaporizers with hot steam or cold mist will also help loosen secretions.

Don't forget the rest and hot chicken soup. They are grandmothers' best remedies and they still work today. Modern man and his genius haven't improved on the treatment.

If you don't have a fever, normal activities are fine. Don't be afraid of exposing others because that was done before the symptoms surfaced. People with colds and flu are being contagious after the first one to three days.

Complications do develop with cold and flu. There is always the possibility of pneumonia or ear infections. See a doctor when there is severe ear pain, persistent coughing that brings up secretions that are rusty brown, foul smelling, and thick, or if a fever persists or has increased.

The clue to remember is to see a doctor if ever there is a distinct change in symptoms or a rise in fever.

Health Services is available to help students lessen cold and flu discomfort. Students can obtain a throat culture to determine they do not have a "strep" infection from 8:15 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday and from 8:15 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Fridays.

If students are feeling a little weary from symptoms, they may want to attend class. A physician is available four weekdays mornings. You provide the liquids and they will provide the aspirin. Sorry, they don't supply the chicken soup.

The next Student Senate meeting will be Tuesday, March 24, at 1 in A206.

Don't drink yellow water

by UPCHUCK FLAHER

Harper College will be closing its doors to faculty members and students after 6 p.m. on Friday, May 29 due to some urgently needed revisions on the school's sewage system.

According to Palatine Health Officials, the drinking fountains and the toilet pipes at Harper are interconnected, forcing students to drink certain waste matter.

Up until now, no one realized what the foul odor was that permeated the dirty yellow liquid spewing up from the drinking fountains on every building on campus.

As odd as it may seem, the school has been in existence since 1962 and up until now, no one has figured out why each year, 100% of people have been dropping dead of malaria and typhoid fever for no apparent reason.

According to health officials, the problem originated when a Texas Architect designed William Rainey Harper College, thinking it was going to be built in Houston, Texas. When questioned by a team of HARBANGER investigative reporters, the architect began to tremble. He finally broke down and cried, giving his full confession.

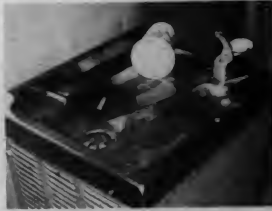

"I didn't mean to harm anyone," he said. The architect, Jimmy O'Riuffra, later told the HARBANGER that Texans don't have nearly as delicate digestive tracts as those people in the NW suburbs surrounding Harper.

A later investigation into

Texan health regulations revealed the reason why their sanitation codes are really quite lenient compared to those we enjoy up North. It seems that Texans' intestinal tracts could just about grand glass if the need should ever arise.

O'Riuffra now faces charges in three separate counties in Illinois. He is linked to over 1,000 drinking fountain related deaths that have occurred at Harper over the past ten years.

Palatine Health Officials are also trying to link O'Riuffra to 50 deaths that occurred at the school cafeteria after the students drank the Coke, Mr. P's and 7-Up during their lunch break. Investigators have reasons to believe that the soda fountain is also connected to the toilet pipes.

STUDENTS ARE advised to refrain from drinking the water in the fountains on Harper's campus until the sewage pipes are disconnected from the water pipes.

Kool-Aid here, bringin' smiles

by ME

The former Rev. Jim Jones, who was unanimously elected Harper College president last Monday, declared a state of anarchy while announcing that the school would move to nearby Guyana, Illinois, by next fall.

Jones, the former leader of the People's Temple, said he had not accomplished his mission on earth and rose himself from the grave to "make my mark on this world."

"We must reject the establishment, we must reject the establishment," were the cries as Jones stepped up to the presidential podium. "My sons and daughters, we must reject the establishment!" he said.

Jones, who was the presidential election on the slogan, "We must reject the establishment," is a firm believer in rejecting the establishment.

"We must reject the establishment," continued the cries from the Kool-Aid stands behind Jones' podium.

"My sons and daughters, when we reject the establishment, we have declared our freedom as individuals. And when we have declared our freedom as individuals, we have

What do we do now Jimmy?

by ME

Jim Jones' declaration of anarchy has left Harper's future up in the air. He has, as he has done on numerous other occasions, left the school open to speculation—speculation that led Jones to another downfall.

NEWS ANALYSIS

He has replaced the Harper Security, here-known as the Keystone Kiddle Corps, with his own Anarchy Brigade, similar to Hitler's Nazi Youth of the 1930's and 40's.

Jones has also replaced the Harper janitors, those notorious rejected the establishment!" Jones is a frustrated leader who has fought all his life for the idea to reject the establishment. Once, to spite former President Richard Nixon, Jones formed a Hare-Krishna Consciousness Movement to reject Washington's long-standing Christian establishment. His appeal to the young generation has never subsided, as proven by his landslide victory at Harper last week. "Like uh, hey, he's into rejection," said one Harper student, Melvin Bone. "I'm, uh, into rejection, too, like, it's de ja vu, you know?"

Said Vanilla W. Hore, "He's just a napper, fantastic guy. He just owns it really dig him. He just

"TV-watchers" when they weren't watching their news! They cannot, says Jones, differentiate between what is real and what isn't real. "Therefore," he says, "They can not reject what is not real."

High on Jones' enemy list is the Student Senate. They work, and that, says Jones, "must be rejected. They must be, they must!"

Don't be fooled by Jones' fanatical tone. He is a puppy in warm one at that! At heart, "I wouldn't harm a fly. And if you don't believe that, I will simply reject you," he says. "This is another example of Jones' political prowess—reject what you don't believe. This, also, is why Jones is such a popular president. He is willing to ignore the bad, and simply reject (what some believe) the good, and kill the ugly.

What Jones has left for speculation is, "Where does the school go from here?" Will it go to Guyana? Or will it simply be rejected right out of existence?

Jones will not say. He will only reject what he doesn't believe. When he doesn't reject an idea, then we will know for sure. But, until then...

captures the genuine homo-geneous awareness in me. Besides, he's a Taurus."

Jones refused to talk to reporters at his inauguration speech because, as he said, "we must also reject the press."

A struggle between Student Trustee Bruce Tooca and Harbanger staff cartoonists broke out at this point. Tooca was pulled to the floor by the six cartoonists, who were dressed up as clowns for a Retired Clown's benefit. The scuffle soon subsided, however, as 13 babies began crying in the corner.

Jones suddenly rushed to the infants and tried to force cups of Kool-Aid down the children's mouths.

A mother tried to stop Jones, but was immediately shot to death by Jones' Anarchy Brigade.

Further chaos broke also, but (the Harbanger) can not tell of the details, because we would be rejecting Jones' rejection, and we can not do that.

Jones, however, did avert further violence by singing a Guyanese lullaby. "Good night, sleep tight, you won't wake-up tomorrow."

As the Anarchy Brigade began sifting through the dead bodies, two Harbanger reporters were discovered.

One, who was later identified as Moods for Modern columnist Mike Simkus, was thrown off the Second Level balcony by New Wave music rejecter Simkus' last audible words were, "Led Zeppelin, 1970's."

President resigns; 'it's a waste'

It looks like Harper will soon be short one college president.

Current president, James McMass made it official last night that he is going to quit after he collects his last paycheck this Friday afternoon.

"Checking the press and board members at his last press conference, McMass admitted that he considered college a "waste of time."

"Garbage then make more money than most of our grads."

"I'm tired of trying to fool the students into believing that college is a good investment in their futures. I've been a hypocrite up until now. I recognize my mistakes and I plan to change my evil ways, starting now."

What about his future? McMass plans to pack up his "big and kaboodle" move to the inner city where he will open up a pornography bookstore. McMass later admitted that it was always his dream to own a "little shop" of his own.

With a tear in his eye, McMass then went into the sad repertoire of what his life was like when he was in college. Student like so many at Harper,

"I had every minute of it," he wimpers. "I only went to please my parents. The only thing I got out of college was the weekends."

Weekends as McMass describes them, consisted of "wine, women and song. As soon as it hit 6:30 on a Friday afternoon, we had more booze and breads than we knew what to do with."

But what does Mrs. McMass have to say about all of this? Well, she visited the McMass residence and the atmosphere was no less than ecstatic.

"I know Jimmy couldn't put up with being a college president for too long," she said. "Of course, I always thought he was going to quit and do landscaping. He always

Diamond Doves an insult to all chics

There it sat, perky and proud -- a little stifle asking for applicants for a newly created position -- a Diamond Dove.

Could this be.

Is it possible in this day of women's liberation, Title IX and equality in athletics that someone would have the audacity to advertise for a bat girl for the baseball team and tag the job with a title like Diamond Dove?

Along with passing out programs and making posters for the team she will have to twither through the bleachers making cooing noises?

Will her official uniform come equipped with feathers, wings and a flashy tail?

Rather than riding the bus with the guys for away games will she be required to fly?

Or will her all male keepers hang a poster around her neck that says Fly Me -- the now defunct slogan that set feminists picketing on Madison Ave.

Okay, okay -- if Diamond Doves are really necessary the women's softball team deserves equal honors. If the men's team gets its bat girl the women deserve a similar helper who can stash their sweaty towels, pass around the water bottle, keep the bats neatly stacked and keep track of the game ball.

And if the men need a female to fulfill this function, it seems only fair that the women should get a male.

But naming the position will be the trick. Diamond Doves is already taken and everyone knows no self-respecting male would ever apply for a job with that type of title anyway.

If the ladies are smart they would have to pick a macho title, like Batter's Buzzard.

Their boy, then, could snarl and chew on the bats between innings. He could wear short brown shorts and maybe an Indian headdress made of buzzard feathers. He could run around drooping at opponent players, waiting for them to die under the pressures from the mighty Harper softball team.

Although we don't know for a fact, we would assume that the softball team not only does not have a bat boy but they probably have to keep their own bats and bats in order, pick up their own towels and make their own posters.

Betty Friedman -- where are you when we need you?

who has still not been identified, was found next to an empty quart of frozen mumblebee. "I see the birds; I see the trees, now I am free."

Jones closed out his inaugural speech with a praise to Allah and serenity. "We reject all that is not real, and nothing is real. Praise Allah!"

Jones departed the A-Lounge among the restored dead and books entitled Karma-Revisited.

Only 346 died during Jones' speech, almost 100 fewer than a Chicago Tribune poll had projected earlier this week.

Now Jones, who is entering the first week of his office term, is faced with his first crucial decision of his so-far brilliant political career: "Who is to do about the pool tables?" Student Senate President

Mike Lay Away, who was later found dead after a shaving accident, said "We must reject the pool-tables, we must reject the pool-tables."

The pool tables, however, refused to comment about their future. "We don't wish to say anything to incriminate our selves," said one.

Jones said he would react with the utmost rejection.

talked about getting into a dirty business. I guess that is just as good. Besides, Jimmy's a rambling kind of guy. He can't seem to stay put for a long stretch of time," Lady McMann added.

Where does this leave 20,000 Harper College Students? There's a good question. It's too late for refunds on classes on it looks like a lot of people have just lost a lot of money.

McMann does have one suggestion for students, who, after reading this paper decide to quit the college life and earn a respectable living for a change. "You can find out more about McMann's plan to rehabilitating college-educated mounds by writing to the exprudent himself in care of: College in A Crack, 123 Slim Alley View, Chicago, Ill. 60608.

Any students who feel ripped after discovering all the money wasted on classes at Harper should be thankful that the college waste was discovered now and not next year when the tuition will jump one dollar per semester hour to break the snail's race in the history of college ripoffs.

Real political issue lies behind a closed door

by DEBBIE DART

Our people of this great nation will face a serious decision when November rolls around the corner. We will soon be called upon to select a capable man to be the next president of the United States. Americans, we need to begin thinking seriously about politics and their grave repercussions. I am the first to admit that this election business is pretty tricky.

Who are we going to elect to run this crazy country for the next four years? We need to stop, take a step back and seriously look at the present day issues and how the presidential candidates are proposing to handle them.

I personally feel that every single one of the men running for president are avoiding the real issues. Oh sure, they've talked about unemployment, but hell, who cares? I've got a job. I work my butt off. Not just 9 to 5 either, I'm one of those people who takes their work home with them. I've got sleepers and tension headaches.

Unemployed people make me SICK! They're just content lazy slobs looking for a handout. I don't see us should stop talking so much about unemployment and give those slobs jobs to grind their noses on. Get them out of those unemployment lines and into the working force by cutting off those welfare checks and other freebies.

Abortion is another issue the candidates just love to debate about. I can't see how this has become such an important issue. Half the population is male. How does abortion even enter into their lives? It's really dumb to waste valuable time thinking about the pro and con on this subject. Haven't they heard of birth control? Come on, this is the 20th century. Don't be no nukes! Get on the pill or have your tubes tied like I did.

Iran is something the presidential candidates just won't let up on either. Come on, don't you see the whole thing has been blown way out of proportion? Look at it this way. There are how many millions of Americans living in the U.S.?

Well, I have any exact numbers, but there are quite a few if you count the high rises and inner city slums in Chicago. My point is, what difference do 16 American make? Do you personally know any of them? I'd wager it's more than you don't. So drop it, o.k.?

Inflation has a lot of people crying their eyes out, trying to figure out where the next meal is going to come from. It's so simple, we just need more money. There's no need to make it a national issue why just have the government print up some more five and tens? It's that easy. No need to work up a sweat about it. The answer is sometimes as easy as recognizing it when it hits at right in the face.

So that's the real issue? That's what you want to know, right?

Nobody has paid any attention to the biggest crisis that afflicts all Americans: male, or female, rich or poor, pregnant or sterile. You know what I'm referring to. Imagine yourself smuggled up on your living room couch. You're really comfortable and getting into a novel about passion, sex and violence when all of a sudden you hear the toilet running. Doesn't that irritate you? It really ticks me off.

Why is it that we can send a man to the moon, but we can't do anything to keep the toilet handle from sticking. I'd like to know why none of the candidates have bothered to mention this issue -- toilet run-on. Oh sure, they're hiding behind Iran and ERA and things like that.

Why don't they just come out and say it? "I don't have the solution to the toilet tank problem."

I can't stand it anymore! That noise, that drip, drip, drip in the tank is about enough to make me fill my pants.

What's the solution? Better chair? New washers? Oh forget it. Why do I even bother anymore. Vote for whomever you want to. I think they all stink. I don't think I'm even going to vote this year.

If you're out there Carter or Reagan or Kennedy or whoever is running this time, I dare you. I dare you to face the real issues. You start talking about solutions for the American heartbeat problem and maybe then I'll allow my face at the polls. Do you hear me Carter? Do you hear me Kennedy? Then, just maybe I'll vote!

Do ugs deserve the right to life

Feeling pretty ugly these days? Well a lot of people on campus may be feeling the same way. Harper College's Counseling Dept. will host an UGLY SEMINAR in the college lounge on Tuesday, April 19 at 10:30 p.m. The seminar is open to all students and faculty. Some special invitations will be sent to extremely ugly personal and students who have been seen on campus by members of the Counseling Dept. If there is someone you think should receive an invitation, please contact the counseling center by 11 p.m. tomorrow.

Special guest at the show will be Maurice LeComman. LeComman will explore such questions as "Why am I so ugly?", "What body parts can I have surgically removed and still function as a human being?", and "Should ugly people have the right to live?"

Also appearing at the seminar will be models from a big name modeling agency in downtown Chicago who will make the ugly people feel self conscious and hopefully do something about their outer appearance.

Norman LaFairy will then open up a question and answer session where he will give out beauty secrets to some of the more obvious ugly people in the audience. He has been known to discuss all areas of ugliness from principles to ward-robed appendages. The seminar will come to its end, when Mr. LaFairy will personally do a beauty makeover to one person in the audience after all ugly persons present take a vote as to who is the ugliest of them all.

America's 10 really a two

By I.M. Beter

Bough Derrick, the lively temptress who starred in the movie "Ten," is now being sued by the American Public for nearly $700,000.

Ms. Derrick saw faces fraud charges after trying to pass herself off as a "ten" when in reality she only rates as a "two".

The full-scale investigation into Ms. Derrick's real appearance is headed up by the nation's expert on rip-offs, Ralph Nadir.

After seeing the movie "Ten" for himself, Nadir became suspicious and decided to "check out the meat" for himself.

RALPH NADIR

Apparently, Ms. Derrick answered the ring at the front door early one morning unprepared for Nadir in only her robe and slippers. It was obvious she did not have time to cover up her multiple facial scars with thick creams and powders as she had to do for her movie.

"At first, I thought it was the maid," Nadir said, "but then I recognized the beads in her hair or should I say wig."

Sad as it may seem, Derrick is really bald.

"Not realizing who I was," Nadir said, "she removed her wig to take care of an itch on her scalp due to a severe case of dandruff."

Nadir further elaborated on Ms. Derrick's failure to stack up to a true "ten" by telling reporters that Ms. Derrick's chest is as flat as a pancake.

"Bough Derrick stuff," Nadir said.

As if that wouldn't be enough to break the American men's hearts, the deceitful Derrick also suffers from unsightly cellulite or more commonly known as fat globules which plague her upper thighs and arms.

Nadir, who said he can not remember ever working on such a serious rip-off case before in his entire career, is calling this probe the Derrick Scan.

He then explained how Ms. Derrick has managed to fool the American Public in her movie debut.

"It's all done with trick photography," Nadir said. "In real life, she's just another ugly broad."

After being called into the matter, U.S. Supreme Court Justice Warren Bous has ordered Ms. Derrick to pay back all persons who wasted their money on the movie by suing them $4 bucks.

The broken down and dejected Ms. Derrick had no comment for the press. The consumer watchdog, Nadir, said the Derrick Scan is a case that is nearly finished and so is Bough.

In his next investigation, he will explore the question that has always left some doubt in his mind, "Is Elvira really the King of Rock n' Roll?"

Khomeini a swell guy

by GUY L. BELL

Before a crowd of thousands, late last night, the Ayatollah Khomeini proclaimed that the hostage situation in Iran was just a joke.

Raul Tarr, who is now revealed to be Khomeini's right hand man, embraced the dictator, calling him "a swell guy" and told enablers and reporters that Khomeini really meant no harm by pretending to hold the 50 American hostages in the American Embassy.

According to Khomeini, he was "only" fanning the Americans. The 50 so-called captives, he said were not held against their will, but were in fact playing and pretending to stage what he envisioned as a "joke on Carter" just before the election.

What truly appear to be a rare form of sick humor, raised many giggles out of most of the fake hostages in the US embassy in Tehran.

"We really had you guys going," said one US marine stationed at the embassy at the time of the phony siege.

When interviewed before a crowd of U.S. cameras and microphones, the hostages just laughed and said that what the American press had printed about their stay in Iran was just another example of newspaper sensationalism.

Khomeini telephoned President Carter, inviting him and Mrs. Carter to go to Iran and join in on the personal tour of his country he plans to give to the 50 American tourists that week before hiding them all farewell tears streamed from the Ayatollah's eyes as he realized that the party would soon be over.

After the tour, the Ayatollah plans to have one of his wives, accompany Mrs. Carter in a combination wine-tasting, upperware party where she will receive a complimentary bottle of wine and a cold collar. Khomeini said he's glad to see one look any real offense to his little joke and he hopes to do it again soon to another country.

When asked why he suddenly decided to let the American Public in on his little "joke" just before the election, he responded to have an army of stomic bombs dropped on Tehran, Khomeini said, "I never like to push a joke too far."

Virginity epidemic runs rampant

By Ina Virga

Sex and Harper College Students. What do these two have in common? According to a recent Harper Sex Poll, they walk two completely different paths, they march to the tune of a different drummer, or to be perfectly blunt, all Harper Students are virgin.

The survey, administered to every student on campus, conclusively proved that 99 and nine-tenths percent of the students attending classes at Harper have chosen to remain celibate. Crazy? A lo, you say?

Several of the students told the Harbanger investigative reporters why they still had not experimented in what seems to be sweeping other college campuses in epidemic proportions.

"This is only a two-year college," one student said. "We don't want to bother. We don't want to get involved."

One student exploded with rage when a Harbanger reporter called Harper students "apathetic."

"We're getting sick and tired of you jerks at the Harbanger calling everyone at Harper, 'apathetic'!" Healen went on to explain how things are different at two-year colleges.

"Students here," he said, "don't have time to get to know each other. By the time we finish our classes, go to work, and do our homework, who has time for sex?"

The same students made no comment, however, when they were told by reporters that their neighboring two-year school, Oakton Community College had drastically high rates of venereal disease and more than 40 unwed mothers roaming the campus. Upon learning about the apathetic atmosphere the Harper Students have managed to create, Jeannie Pankonini, student activities director and Fred Wawas, her faithful assistant, repeatedly tried to "air up some anatomical statistics among the students" by showing them a-rated flicks such Wednesday night in Hyde Park at 2 a.m.

According to Pankonini, the students are highly encouraged to come and see the movies — don't charge them a damn thing, Pankonini said. "All they need to do is flash their student IDs."

According to Wawas, all the movies have the same underlying theme — sex. Included in the movies already shown at Harper include, "Alice in Paradise" and "Goldilocks and the Three Girls."

Surprisingly enough, even these movies have failed to bring about any sense of college pride or involvement on the campus.

"It just seems like a damn waste of time," Pankonini said with tears in her eyes. "The same 10 or 15 students always show up every Wednesday night. We'd really like to see some new bodies here once in awhile."

The sex survey did reveal one very shocking fact about the Harper Students at large. The virgin students told reporters they were "saving themselves."

"For marriage!" we asked. "Hell no," they said. "We're waiting till we transfer to a four-year college," they said.

Harper next year.

But, if you have already experienced the annoying and persistent sensation that comes with leprosy or if you have noticed that one or more of your limbs have fallen off, then it is obviously too late for the vaccination.

Those faculty and students who have reason to believe they may already be infected are urged to please pack up to live in a leper colony to ensure the health of the rest of us.

SAFETY IN NUMBERS. So seems to be the motto among students on campus choosing to keep their virginity until they hit a four-year college. Students say they just don't have time for life's simple pleasures while attending a junior college.

Twins face hairy surgery

Two Harper basketball players were flown to New York today where extensive surgery will be performed to separate the two from the armpits.

The two have been joined together since birth, and have played center forward for the Hawks this season. The parents of the two could not think of suitable names for the two, so they just called them 33 and 44.

"It really hasn't been too bad all these years," said 33. "Our parents have been able to save on electricity as we have one less lamp to take care of."

"But, lately it's been a drag. How can anyone do some night moves in the back of the car with someone dragging along?" said 44. "I'll be glad not having to share my dates anymore. If I want to have sex I have to make sure he's sleeping or passed out."

The two performed well on defense for Harper doing a good job in clogging up the middle, but on their offensive shots the two couldn't get their hands organized.

"I'll be happy to have two teammates instead of one and a half," said Harper basketball coach Roger "the dodger" Belchold. "But who knows they might only be half the player they used to be."

The two are scheduled to come back sometime next week and their parents are feverishly trying to think of the names when they become two.

HARPER COLLEGE. Shamese twin brothers are delighted with the prospect of surgery that will end their all too close relationship.

Leprosy

Vaccinations for leprosy are now being given at the college's health center to stop the spread of the dreaded disease.

All students are encouraged to visit the health center for their free shot. The health center will be open from 1 p.m. to 1:15 p.m. on Saturday, April 6. Since this will only be a 15 minute span for the availability of the shots, students are urged to come for the shots only if they are really enjoying life at the present time or plan to attend

Palatine youth to join Harper squad

Harper football coach John Insack announced the signing of a highly sought after recruit Billy Smith. The 60-pound, all-around player was also recruited by Ohio State, USC, Purdue and Jane Addams Jr. High in Schaumburg.

"I'm very pleased to get Billy. He's the kind of player that could turn a program around," said Insack whose team hit the last season. "We recruited him because he can play any position and lord knows, we needed help desperately last year. He's a very intelligent. He can spell his own name without any help and count in 10 every so often."

Smith a grade-schooler from Palatine weighed all the offers then decided on Harper for a variety of reasons.

"They offered me the pick of any cheerleader I wanted," said Smith, while trying to learn numbers 10 to 20. "They also said I could eat as much ice cream as I wanted and not have to attend class except for Advanced Signature. My parents like the coaches and I can't wait till I get out there and smash somebody's head in."

Smith will start classes next semester and sit on Harper's four-year plan.

HARPER'S HOPE: Billy Smith, Palatine grade schooler, will don a Hawks jersey next season in hopes of upgrading the ailing football team. Smith turned down numerous offers from around the country to attend Harper.

Is X-Mas really Christ's birthday?

"Dear Juli: What were the planetary positions on the day that Christ was born and can you see any similarities in their positions and those of the future that would indicate the coming of another Messiah?"

This question sure put me to work! It took many phone calls, a trip to the library, hours of work with my calculator to research this and I still couldn't arrive at a conclusive answer! I don't feel too bad about it though, because there are several astrologers, as well as clergymen and theologians throughout the world who have dedicated their entire lives towards studying and analyzing exactly what day Jesus Christ may have been born. As of yet, experts on this subject cannot agree among themselves as to one particular day (Some can't even agree as to what year?)

Astro Awareness
by JULI REALY

The main problem lies within the fact that calendars in those days weren't exactly what they are now. There were various time keeping systems used, and even though they were all based on some kind of astronomical measure, there were too many variations and discrepancies from year to year. Thus, they were mainly inaccurate, and many historical lessons such as these are left unswayed and prone to guesswork.

By now, you're all probably wondering how the world arrived at December 25 as Christ, the birthday of Jesus Christ. The answer is that taken us back to the days of ancient Greece. The Greeks used to celebrate a "Saturnalians" festival every year at the winter solstice, which just happens to fall around December 25. The solstice was celebrated in reverence to the mythical god Saturn, which is now the name of one of the planets. Years after Christ's birth, when Christianity began to spread to these people, they just replaced their mythical "Saturnalians" festival with a religious holiday to celebrate the Lord's birth. This custom went on for ages, and to this day, Christmas as Christmas, still unchanged.

Now, to get back to the question. No, I do not know the exact planetary positions for Christ's birth, but throughout my searching, I did run across a planet, courtesy of Astro Numeric Service (Box 112, El Cerrito, CA, 94530).

The chart contains a planetary configuration which is symbolic of a sacrificial victim. It also represents total giving of self for the benefit of the whole, and dedication to a life's purpose of spiritual transformation. It is a very interesting chart, but I cannot confirm its accuracy.

As to whether I can forecast the coming of another messiah through the planetary positions repeating themselves, I have to say no again. I did investigate the approximate mean orbits of the five slowest moving outer planets for the last 1000 years, and I could not find the same exact pattern repeating itself. And that still leaves three planets, the Sun and Moon's positions unaccounted for!

My own personal feelings as an astrologer are that while certain planetary positions would be identical between the two, others would not be. The reason being, simply, that world affairs would be different, and so would the purpose served. It is this only an opinion, and as the saying goes, "The Lord only knows!"

Anyone wishing astrological interpretations please submit specific questions along with the required birth data to the Harbinger Office located in Bldg. A 307. Look there for further details.

Take this and use it against me

Last week I sat around the Harper campus listening to the radio station play their select lists. I wondered who chose the songs to play. I wondered who wanted to hear this commercial crap that was being played on WHCM. And then it came to me. It was a revelation, the Harper College student.

As I sit around this campus, Harper students who recognize my picture come up to me and say, "Aren't you the guy who writes the music columns?"

I usually reply "Yes." Usually, the next thing that comes out of the student's mouth is unprintable, but there are some mild criticisms of my columns from fellow students: "Hey, you don't know nothing about music," "Your columns suck eggs," "Who ever told you, you were a music critic," "I can't stand you, or the stuff you review, or sometimes I read the first sentence and then read the whole section of the paper."

Not only do I receive criticisms from students, but now I have received "suggestions" from the Harper Student Senate. They say the following: "Get rid of Mike Simkin."

Well, now that I have got those suggestions I find it necessary to give Harper students some new information.

One of the questions I am asked by fellow students is, "What groups do you like or dislike?" There now is what I feel about some of the more commercial aspects of radio-band. And most likely the following list will contain groups that, yes, the Harper student admires and praises God for.

AC/DC - The best thing that ever happened to this group is that the lead singer, Bon Scott, died, more precisely, "that's too damn bad." If the guy can't handle steroids then he doesn't belong in the limelight. Not only is Scott dead, but he was killed - the biggest rip-off; he could have at least jumped out of the Quasimodo 'n' et al. on feet that he took to come to America from his Australia homeland. I wish the group AC/DC would have stayed in their homeland playing with the Neala teens and setting up jumping contests with the kangaroos.

Lovermuth - I thought these guys should have crawled under a rock after their "Troy In The Attic" album. You want to talk about incompetence, these guys are role models. Not only are they bad musicians, but they have the audacity to rip-off the Rolling Stones. Sorry, Steven Tyler is not Mick Jagger.

Bad Co. - Mick Topala and that guy named Rogers are not my idea of the British rock 'n' roller that they think they are. Their music is last, no direction, no creativity. Mick should have stayed with Ian Hunter, and Rogers should have stayed with Free.

Bad News - Come on now, how long can any sane human being take the "delphin in heat" vocals that these guys think the public wants to hear? I really know their problem - their neck straps are too tight. But maybe that's because they buy time extra small. In this way, they make the girls think there is a lot there, when there is in essence nothing. Hey guys, go back to size medium.

Electric Light Orchestra - Recently the Harbinger ran a letter to the editor and it said, "You do not know the groups that I critique." Well, I know you're out there Mr. K. I used to be an ELO fan. My following of the group ended with "Eldorado." Why you may ask? Well since you asked, this group should be renamed, "Jeff Lynn's Dietrichs." It used to be that the group combined efforts; now Lynn's health is over everything like a kid in a candy store. And the ultimate end of pure manufactured crap were the shows that the group rip-offed.

by MIKE SIMKIN

Foghat - I never understood why anyone liked this band. They are not original and they do not present any new avenues of creativity. Go home, Foghat, to the British shores from which you came.

Heart - These two girls from who knows where, and who really cares, are screaming discs. It was okay to scream and rant when there was a war, but Vietnam ended a long time ago. The girls are not Joan re-incarnated. Sorry, folks.

Jedreth Tull - I think named these guys "Jedreth Dull." That is, of course, very adequate for a group that still believes in "living in the past."

Journey - I am left amazed at all of the people who like this group. They suck rotten eggs. They have had one album which is creative. Am I dreaming? No, but I wish their albums would self-destruct on my turntable, and I wish that their airplane would collide with the Dallas Cowboys football team's jet in a mid-air disaster.

Judas Priest - Again, I am not into screaming. They are, I suppose, for all those people out there who are methodist clinic who's.

LED Zepplin - Can I just say that I have waited for this moment ever since I started writing here at Harper. First, I was happy that the Led Zepp had gotten into a car accident and were hurt. No, not because I am a sadist, but because I think that from their blood album on they have taken too many Ex-Lax tablets. Secondly, I was upset that they came back, making more "crap," probably a result of these overuses of Ex-Lax tablets. What Neil Young said, "It's better to burn out than to fade away," applies to the nature and character of the Led Zeppolans.

Molly Hatchet - I wonder how long it will take the police to realize that these guys are LYNNED SKYNNED rip-offs. Remember, you learned that here first.

Ted Nugent - I am not sure how many people beyond the Clearmail age like Ted. If you can take the leader than get ego-manic, sexual lyric. Don't contact me. I'm sure you would like two free tickets I've got to the methodist clinic.

Pink Floyd - Can you excuse me for one minute? I'm shy, now, a Floyd song was just on and I thought I was flying. No, I wasn't really flying. I thought I was flying. Maybe though I was flying, and I did not have I was flying. But, I thought I was flying. Wow, man, Floyd makes you think you're flying, right?

Queen - How many of you out there thought the new song called "Crazy Thing Called Love"? Now, raise your hands high and don't be shy. I thought that many I suppose the time I can understand. After all, how many times does a rock group burn or make a 300 degree change?

Rush - I wish someone would call me and tell me which sex therapist Gerry Lee is. I cannot think of a popular band that still insists on keeping the sound of aberrant in the morning of a war. But, I suppose the only reason the group keeps this lead singer is that they can get the homosexuals and heterosexuals to buy their tape because the lead singer has got to be from both sides of the plate and take lessons from the bookies Gibb.

Van Halen - Who do these guys think they are fooling? Not me. I got their number. They are the best imitation of Grand Funk I have ever seen. Not only are they rip-offs, but I do not need the lead singer to play with himself on a jukebox. P.S. I also do not like or need the lead singer to play with his chest hair. I wonder what Fred would say about that.

Yes - Well, since I've recovered from flying with Pink Floyd, I thought I would start to urinate. That's what I've done to me now. I have to go to the nearest bushes and let it fly. Why? Because Yes means something and was highly original and creative when they started. They are either stuck in a rut or have run out of ideas.

Well had up with all of the ammunition I have just given you, and send me a letter how about one of those anonymous death threats I always get. (They are fun!) But, better yet before you send me anything, just put this newspaper where the sun don't shine, see you after break in April, Poole!

Some words about the utopians

Does Todd Rundgren have a vision for the 1980's? I didn't talk to him about it. I didn't talk to him about anything. But if I were allowed to speculate, I'd be inclined to say that Utopia is really trying to convince us that we're "living in the plastic age."

We laughed at Devo when they took the stage in their radiation outfits and executed mechanically upon it. And lots of people laughed at David Byrne (Talking Heads) because he "couldn't sing" and was "too strange". But he certainly seems genuine, which is something I can't say about Todd and Utopia.

Their music? Blatantly commercial at times, satirical during others. And downright serious at times.

The show I witnessed at the Auditorium Theatre on Tuesday, March 19, was a package designed to shock the audience. After concluding their first set with "The Last of the New Wave Riders," Todd and company took a break. So did I, to wait in some lines and give my aching ears a rest. Upon my return, I noticed that the stage had been drastically rearranged around a grand piano and a drum kit that turned out to be the body of a motorcycle. A taped version of Ravel's Bolero poured out of the speaker columns and the video show began.

Was it a good trip? One just "had to be there". The animated dramatics tried to symbolize the routines of life with long sequences of doors, filmed with "the audience in really there" effect. And there were lots of skulls. Come on, check us some more!! Some strange lights, at least!! Wow, we are so modern!

Utopia, the Boleros, each Utopian got a chance to show us some solo material. Kaelin Sulzberger crumpled heretofore on the ridiculous — well, what the hell is serious, anyway? Roger Powell's set of electronics from his new album "Air Pocket" was good, but far from the standards of electronic music set by Jean-Michel Jarre and Tangerine Dream — and many others. At this point it would be easy to become over-critical.

Overall, Utopia is among the most versatile of bands. Each member can play a variety of instruments, which helps bring about their 'highly original' sound. But they seem to substitute all of their finishes in place of true feeling. The over-playing tends to shadow any glimmers of personality.

Don't get the idea that this show was a completely negative experience — most of the music would be enjoyable at a lower volume and the Utopia fans are a fantastic bunch. The results of Rundgren and Utopia's commercial efforts are being directed into a huge TV production — write your networks and demand that it go on TV!!!

Rock 'n roll women

There's a current rash of women latched up in rock 'n roll and it's tough to tell who's wearing the pants in a lot of these bands. Never mind female trash like the Runaways and the Orchids, there are some very talented performers. Tina Weymouth, The Wilson sisters, Lane Lovich, Rachel Sweet to mention just a few, are all pounding their own musical dents. But what is it about some of these women that really sells albums? You get it...see Dabby Harry's combined sleazy-dirty-sensual put on trifles that the success that sexual attraction can bring a band. She's got every Penthouse wearably male listening to Blondie. The two hottest new femmes in this style are Pat Benetar and Christie Hynide. Both have got bullets on the record charts. Pat Benetar's "In the Heat of the Night" and Christie Hynide with the Pretenders debut album. They both opt a lot of vinegar but look appealingly level doing it. I kept asking myself what oppressive indignities manhood shored on them.

Film Review

'Simon' says read...

Woody Allen is famous for his comic talents on the screen. His movies, including "Annie Hall" and "Manhattan," show his great ability of transforming strong, sensitive acting and funny, intelligent dialogue which is held together by incisive direction, into some of the cinema's finest pieces of comedy. But, behind this person, is another person wanting to break out with ideas of his own.

Marshall Brickman has collaborated his writing

"In the Heat of the Night", Pat Benetar's debut album is produced by Mike Chapman, who produced Blondie and the Knack, both characteristic bands. In trying to form a characteristic manner, Pat Benetar stumbles around on this album. "We Live for Love" sounds like producer Chapman left all the knobs in the same spot from Blondie's last album. "Don't Let it Show" is reminiscent of an older Olivia Newton John number. As a matter of fact just by the irregular sound alone the entire L.P. called to mind Olivia Newton John's elegant "Totally Hot". But where Olivia is sweet, innocent and understanding, Benetar is snarling, angry and at times offensive. She's really torn up on sounding tough and she means it. Her emotion bounce around like a pin ball and, for one, am tired of these wispy wacky I love him/I hate him; get away from me-come back to me complaint songs from women who don't know what they want. Her very messy infection is used as though she were taking vocal line to the face of the listener. Benetar swaggers through this album with no humor as she gives all the songs a harsh verbal thrashing. Lyrics like "You're a heartbreaker but don't mess around with me"; "I want a lover that can't drive me mad-one that knows the meaning of hit the highway"; and "If you think you know how to love me-if you want me to stay-you've got to show me the way" typically fit the misty lyrical mood. My fault Pat Benetar has fallen victim to cruel love and had her little heart kicked around.

The Pretenders are just about the hottest act around and Christie Hynide in both bond and catalog. She's exactly what we'd take home to mother though guys. I think she's a good bet for the next female in the spotlight, maybe a feminine Bruce Springsteen. Next time I'll cover her, the Pretenders, and I'll let you know how well Bob Geldof and the Bata got on while they were in town last Friday.

American public believe in extraterrestrial beings. Having found this out one of the scientists knows of a way they can make an extraterrestrial being of their own creation. This scheme requires them to find a man between the ages of 25 and 50 but he must be an orphan, so it might be easier to imply false memories of his ancestry, suggest he was produced "like a toaster" and was brought down to earth in a spaceship.

This is a silly plan, which perfectly describes the movie's opening sequence. A take-off on documentary style shows. We are introduced to the scientists, one by one, and told by them what experiments they conducted. One of the scientists was able to jam a Nielsen ratings box, and by doing that he made "Dorrie & Marie" number 1 nationwide, while in fact truth only a very small percentage watched the show. We find another one in a room sitting (Indiana-style). He then says that "President Nixon was not the same man who returned from China." The camera leads us into another room, where a scientist has a man sitting in a chair, but wired up in order to pick up nerve impulses. The scientist flashes a slide on the wall of a cockroach with no reaction. But when a slide appears of a young slender woman the man jumps about six inches off the chair, while still being in restraints. All this is going on while the scientist goes through explaining what results he is trying to get.

The sharp mixture of visual and tongue-in-cheek humor in this sequence has a spontaneous appearance, which gives this material a commendable approach.

AN SPRINGTIME at Harper, and the coming of spring sports. Aside from girl watching, there'll be girls softball watching. The Lady Hawks will open their SAC season against Thornton on Wednesday. Pitcher Pat Tarwid (far left) and Debbie Dilks (center) and the other Lady Hawks have yet to see the outside become of weather conditions and have been forced to work out inside the gym. Ron Dudley (far right) and the rest of the Harper's men's tennis team have also been forced inside because of the cool, wet weather. The tennis Hawks open their 1980 schedule against Bradley University this Friday at Peoria. (Photos by Rick Kahakee)

Softball warms up for Wednesday opener

by JOE KUNER

There's a new phenomenon striking the Harper athletic department. Retreating from the dead First it was the women's gymnastics team and now the women's softball team has been brought back to life.

Gives the task of helping to make the team a respectable life-form is first-year coach Lynn Hitchcock. Hitchcock recently received her master's degree from Purdue University and teaches at Canton Jr. High in Streamwood.

Last year the team folded due to lack of numbers but so far approximately 18 women have shown up for practices.

In building a decent team there must be a decent pitcher and catcher to start with. The team will have a solid foundation in catcher Debbie Dilks and pitcher Pat Tarwid.

"Debbie is a super catcher," said Hitchcock. "She can hit and also play shortstop, but then we would lose her effectiveness from her defensive abilities as a catcher."

Tarwid was a victim of the team's demise last year but has come back to emerge as the team's main pitcher.

"She has a lot of different pitches, which is unusual for a junior college pitcher."

Hitchcock is literally starting from scratch and didn't know what to expect when she took the job.

"I didn't know what their attitude would be when I came in and really I expected a worse attitude with only eight games on the schedule," said Hitchcock, whose team will take on Thornton at home Wednesday, April 2, with the first pitch of the season at 3:30 p.m.

"So far their attitude has been pretty good but everyone is anxious to get outside. A lot of the women didn't play regularly in high school and being inside we could only work on getting our timing down for hitting and infield situations."

Leading candidate for the shortstop position is Mary Ann Larson, who also carried a heavy bat. Val Weidner was another who was slated for action at the shortstop position but is currently sidelined with a broken bone in her foot. A couple of others that carry big sticks and will see plenty of time on the field are Sue Goodke and Vly Weidner. Weidner is headed for center field and is the team's relief pitcher.

"We have the hitters but no running speed," said Hitchcock. "Defense-wise we'll have a strong infield and have some good arms in the outfield."

"But you have to get outside before you can really say anything. The main problem is the weather. When we're outside we won't have everyone sitting around. The first day we went outside everyone came back in with frozen hands. Once we're outside everything should be all right."

Others on the team include Janice Schimmel, Dawn Neville, Betty Iverzon, Sharon Carlson, Judy Waterbury, Jenny Schwab, Carol Corbick, Jane Juliano and Gina Neri.

Hawks drop 3 of 4 early games

The Harper Hawks opened their 1980 baseball season last week, splitting with Western Illinois and dropping two to Lincoln College.

The Hawks, who swept Judson 5-0 and 4-1 in their first exhibition of the season, trailed WUI 4-1 in the seventh inning of game one before scoring two runs to narrow Western's lead to 4-3. But, with the bases loaded and two out, first baseman Jim Misset flew out to deep left.

Bill Cobe was the losing pitcher. But the returning sophomores gave up only one earned run. A Harper error in the fourth gave way to three other Western runs.

The Hawks bounced back to win game two of the double-header after trailing Western 4-1 after four innings.

Harper scored five runs in their half of the fifth inning to take a 4-4 lead. Misset doubled with the bases loaded to drive in three runs, and then scored on Jim Jensen's triple. Jensen then scored on catcher Russ Winger's squeeze bunt.

Pitcher Pat Reimaster, who came in on relief of Art

Avermann in the fourth inning, got his first win of the year.

"The temperature went up about 20 degrees," said Hawk coach Wally Reynolds, "after Misset's double."

Misset's bat, though, was not hot enough to keep Harper from dropping a double-header to Lincoln.

On a wet field and 35 degree surroundings, Lincoln thumped the Hawks 10-1 and 7-1. Pitcher Don Dowdick gave up only six hits, but the Hawks committed three errors opening the door for six Lincoln runs.

Malkowski wins trustee seat

John Malkowski, a full-time Harper student and Prospect High School graduate, was elected Student Trustee last week.

Malkowski garnered 42 votes, runner-up Carol Turpa 30, and Buddy Berg 30. Only 100 ballots were cast, or 43 percent of the Harper student body voted.

Malkowski, who is 22 years old, spent three years in the Army after graduating from Prospect Stationed in both Ft. Worth, Texas, and Korea. Malkowski was best soldier of his company 11 separate times.

This (Malkowski's age) will put a different light on the job," said Student Activities Advisor Fred Waters. "He has the potential to bring credibility to the job not to undermine Bruce (Zanca, the current Student Trustee, because he's done a helluva job."

Malkowski, on his own, trained the Engineering Club in his letter of petition. Malkowski, who was honorably discharged from the army with the rank of sergeant, said, "I am well qualified in hold this important position. I'm not afraid to stand up or speak out for what I feel is a necessary."

"I was impressed," said Waters, "with his thoroughness of organizing this new club. He really has a concern for the students at Harper."

Malkowski, who will not officially begin until April 13, was out of town and could not be reached for comment on his win.

Shattuck Kicks off first Shakespeare week

by NORA NORTON

Live drama, good food and music, and special speakers will highlight the Harper College Shakespeare Festival from April 18 through 19, the first of its kind at the college.

"We have wanted to do something like this for a long time," said Mary Jo Willis, director of theatre at Harper, "but we didn't have the room. With Bldg 3 completed, we felt we could go ahead."

The idea of a Shakespeare festival came to fulfillment last fall after a campus lecture on Shakespeare by Professor Louis Marder of the University of Illinois, Chicago Circle Campus.

The lecture was well-received by Harper students and community residents resulting in the faculty planning a Shakespeare Festival for spring.

A variety of activities has been planned for those three days, so that there will be something for the whole campus. Keynote speaker for the festival opening will be Charles H. Shattuck, Professor of English at the University of Illinois and president of the Shakespeare Association of America.

Shattuck, who has authored several books, one of the most recent being "Shakespeare on the American Stage," published in 1975, will speak on "Shakespeare in America" on Wednesday morning.

On Wednesday evening a Madrigal Dinner featuring entertainment by the Cameraa Singers will be followed by the Chicago Early Music Consort. Susanne Herres, catering manager of the college food service staff, aided in the preparation of the dinner.

"I have been to a Shakespearean dinner in London and to various madrigal dinners in the Northwest area," she said. "Generally madrigal dinners are associated with Christmas and Epiphany Sunday," she remarked, "and because there are so many diners at that time, it hasn't been practical for us to have one."

Herres was delighted to have the opportunity to work out an Elizabethan style menu to go with the Festival.

"We are going to have a lot of foods that can be eaten without utensils because they were not in vogue then, but we will not entirely eliminate utensils," she said.

"The dessert we have selected Linburgh's Custard, is from an old Elizabethan recipe. It contains dried fruits and beef fat to give it more sweetness," explained Herres.

Trencher tables for ten to 12 persons will be set up and waitresses will bring platters to the table to distribute or pass.

"We will have serving waitresses in old English costumes, a very scarce affair (no men serving). The girls will wear peasant-type bonnets and long-skirts, slightly above the ankle, and mock-up on their heads," she said.

"We are all looking forward to this and expect it will be a fun occasion."

Herres was able to borrow a bear's head from one of the local high schools, which will be carried in at the beginning of the feast, when the Cameraa Singers will start the festivities by singing "The Bear's Head Carol."

(cont'd on page 2)

The Cameraa Singers will sing madrigals of Shakespeare's time.

Cathy Alberg is the director of the Cameraa Singers, who number 14 in all. Mark Arvad, Rebecca Ballan, Bill Bresemann, Caliben Buck, Harry Campaigne, Andy Huppert, John Loggins, Madeline Meyer, Theresa Moran, Jon Natale, Carol Norman, Nancy Folt, Elizabeth Carl.

'Shakespeare' to make campus visit

by NORA NORTON

Shakespeare impersonator Frank Hornish will be on campus in costume to present a one-man show and meet students and visitors on Thursday to help celebrate Harper's first Shakespeare Festival.

Hornish, professor of speech and theatre at the College of Lake County, began playing Shakespeare some years ago, but developed his character more fully when a former student asked him to entertain at the King Richard's Faire in Wisconsin.

Recently Hornish has added Charles Dicken's to his repertoire and appeared at the "Dickens Fair" at the Chicago Avenue Army.

"I had in change my beard shape and hairline then," he said and for the Festival at Harper, "I will have to shave about two inches of hair off my forehead to push back the hairline," he added.

Hornish will first meet with Harper theater students and then stroll around the campus. "I will probably be about 30 minutes on stage, doing 'The Seven Ages of Man,' and possibly 'The Phoenix and the Turtle,' and then encourage the audience to ask me questions about myself as Shakespeare," he said.

Shakespeare week launched

Sidestep and Janet Talmage "I knew the Madrigal Dinner was coming up this spring, so we have had a lot of emphasis on madrigals."

"The madrigal is an essentially musical setting of a short monosyllabic poem, the text of which ranged from the sentimental in the 16th century," she explained. "Madrigals were vocal chamber pieces, usually in four or five voices, written with one performer on a part as the ideal. As was customary, vocal and instrumental doubling was common. The musical organization normally followed sections of the text, some a series of overlapping stanzas, some choral, the two styles often alternating throughout the composition."

"Madrigals were performed as a matter of course for various courtly occasions."

"The madrigal dinner has its roots in the medieval English mid-winter feast, often referred to as the feast of the Boar's Head, which was one of the main delicacies, and the title of a popular vocal composition."

"As the entertainment program included madrigals, singing, re-enactments of such events have become known as Madrigal Dinners."

The singers will be in Renaissance dress, but not full madrigal outfits.

"The cost for full madrigal outfits are extremely expensive," said Allberg, "so the men will wear simple labards and full peasant blouses and the women will wear velvet dresses of their period."

"The men said they wouldn't mind wearing costumes, as long as they don't have to wear tights and hallel shoes," she laughed.

Following the Madrigal Dinner there will be music by The Chicago Early Music Consort, directed by Gary Berkemuhl.

The Consort, featuring the music of John Dowland, will be playing authentic instruments and performance practices of the Renaissance period.

Gary Berkemuhl will play the recorder, racket, crumhorn and lute. John Green, soprano and Wayland Rogers, baritone.

The Consort has been actively presenting a series of concerts and master classes at various points including Harvard, Northern Illinois, DePaul and Northwestern.

On Friday morning the National Players will hold a special workshop for theatre students, followed by a general workshop centering on an imaginative approach to theatre and to dramatic literature for in general students and members of the community.

In the evening the National Players will perform "Twelfth Night" mistaken identity and the laughter, duels and romance of Shakespeare's aristocrats are the comedy elements of this performance.

Other activities for Harper students have been planned to coincide with the festival. Exhibits relating to Shakespearean times, will be on display at the library and in other campus buildings during the three-day festival.

The Festival Committee includes faculty members Michael Bartos (Chairman), Pauline Bunn, Karen Kiers, Mary Jo Willis, Cathy Allberg, Ray De Paulis, Cathy Allberg, Director of Student Activities, Jeanne Rankin, Director of Student Activities, and Lawrence J. Schaefer, Director of College Relations.

EDITORIAL

History repeats: Harper students ignore elections

Well, the Harper College student body has done it again. Another election came and went and virtually no one voted. A mere 149 votes were cast in the Student Trustee election. That is 21 percent of the student body that actually took the time to simply mark a ballot and place it in a box located right in the lounge.

For those who do not know, the election was held to fill the seat of Student Trustee on the Board of Trustees. A student is elected to this position annually to bring the voice of the students to the board. But, based on the number of votes cast, students really do want their ideas and views brought to the board.

Without proper representation, students will be subject to a variety of decisions without ever really having any say in the matter. And how much more obvious can elections get? Posters announcing the election, the polling place in the most populated place on the campus (Bldg. A lounge) and even announcements in the Harbinger bombarded the campus. What will it take to make students realize the importance of their voting in these elections?

A new trustee has been elected and, again for those who are ignorant of the fact, his name is John Malkowski. He obviously takes genuine interest in the welfare of the Student body. He will certainly have many tasks to complete during his term as trustee but it seems that his biggest job will be to keep hammering at the student body until they wake up to the fact that they can only get things done in their favor by using their clout in the first place.

Harper Jocks off-limits in women's locker room

Need a cheap thrill? Believe it or not, you can find plenty of thrills in Harper's women's locker room. If you enjoy watching nude male strut their stuff through the confines of what is supposed to be for women only.

William Hainey Harper College is currently suffering from one of two things. Either the males at Harper are extremely perverse and get their jollies out of peering naked in front of women in their locker rooms as they get dressed for their next class, or they're just so stupid, they can't read the sign on the door that says "women".

It's gotten to the point where some women refuse to take showers after their gym classes due to a dread that some mischievous male will walk through at just the "right" moment. Shyly, they deny the real reason for abstaining from cleanliness and make up phony excuses for going to their next class looking like one of the "weenie bops".

What does the Facility Manager, Fred Inden have to say about this rapidly growing problem?

Inden explained that the women's locker room is connected to a "swing locker room" by a single door. The "swing locker room," Inden said, is used when Harper hosts an athletic event and needs room for the guest team. It seems this "swing locker room" is becoming a swinging locker room instead.

FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF CINDY CARAVELLO BUSINESS MANAGER

The men's locker room is connected to the same "swing locker room" by another door. Inden said the door that leads from the women's locker room to the swing locker room is always supposed to be locked during the day, but unfortunately it seems it's always open. Someone is neglecting to lock the door on the women's side because Harper thinks have been spotted by the under-grads only women on their side of the door.

Inden explained that the door on the swing locker room is unlocked at night for cleaning and maintenance purposes, but sometimes is neglected when it comes to relocking it. This is where the male sewage occurs. Males peering through that door with the frequency of the female and female of a downtown subway station.

Inden said the only other complaints he has received about the locker room were just brushed off because Harper feels no one had really mentioned the matter with any sense of urgency. All the remarks made by women about the so-called locker rooms were just "off-hand remarks." The women were saying things like, "they a guy just straddled through here the other day."

Harper's athletic trainer, Mike McClane offered a suggestion regarding who men are frequently in the women's facilities. "People are retarded," he said.

I really thought that was a profound statement on the part of one of Harper's staff members. About two weeks ago when I approached McClane in his own "ter"ry, the trainer's room, he got a good chuckle out of the women's complaint about taking showers for fear that a Tarzan-like ape-man would come pouring through the showers.

He slyly commented that the men wouldn't mind if we came into their locker room. In fact, he said, they wish we would. Ha! Ha!

McClane offered no solution, but Inden did promise to look into the matter and make sure that the problem is corrected. Let's hope so. This may be the twentieth century, but are we really ready for co-ed locker rooms?

But even if Inden does solve the peeping Tom crisis, it will only create another problem. Where do you go for a cheap thrill now?

Tennis preview Hawks go for 3rd straight

by JOE KEARNS

Just because a majority of the Harper men's tennis team are freshmen, don't think coach Ray Kearns is expecting a down year.

"There is a certain tradition playing for Harper tennis and the expectations of success are there," said Kearns, whose team has won the Region IV state title two years in a row. "We have a number of experienced people this year. Four of our freshmen were their team's number one player in high school. We have 12 people on the team, more than we've ever had. It's the first time we've had that many so competitive."

The only two returning from last year's state title winners are sophomores Mike Franzen and Mark Smith. "The two are good team players," said Kearns of the pair who are slated to play in the second doubles position.

The four singles slots will feature four freshmen and the order could change on any given day. The quartet battling it out are Jeff English, Ron Dudley, Kevin Priests, and Brett Ulinich.

"With our depth this year our second and third singles will be playing off a bit. I think this is a healthy thing and our guys will meet the challenge," commented Kearns.

"Right now most of our guys don't have enough tournament experience. In each practice we try to put in a new play experience. With the new facility [Bldg. M] we've been able to hit everyday and our conditioning is better. That can make a big difference with a team. We're becoming very sophisticated with our program - like ours we've been able to videotape players during practice. We're just beginning to learn how to use the facility."

The team started the season on a winning note, capturing the Harper Indoor Doubles Invitational in late March. Harper finished the meet with its points while Joliet, a team that could challenge the Hawks for the state title, was runner-up with eight.

Others on the team include Steve Jones, Kirk Dedrickson, Steve Fawcett, Dave Abell, Scott Wulff and Bill Casey. The Hawks next home match (Saturday, April 19, when they take on Joliet and Lake County.

"There is a variety of character on this team. Last year's squad was more team-oriented while this team is a little more independent," said Kearns. "Last year our strength was our first three singles players, this year the first six will always be challenging to get into the lineup. I'm looking forward to a fun year."

BACK HIT: Seniors Bill Hart and Steve Fawcett are familiar to the Harper baseball team. Only once have the Hawks played on their home field - beating Johnson 3-4 and 4-1 almost three weeks ago. (Harbinger file photo)

Baseball loses six to rain

BY MIKE BAMBACH

April showers may bring May flowers, but to the Harper baseball Hawks, last week's rains brought no more than six consecutive rainouts.

The Hawks, 7-3 overall, were supposed to open their home schedule against Illinois Benedictine last Saturday, and have yet to play an NAC conference game.

Harper, though, has produced some impressive statistics. Including a 27- run short-out game against Lincoln last two weeks ago. Bill Cobe has emerged as the Hawks' leading pitcher.

In three games, Cobe has given up only one earned run, walked four and struck out 10, leading four and pitched in 14 innings. Cobe, who is 3-1, is also the fifth leading pitcher in the state and the leading hurler in the NAC conference.

Three Hawks, Kirk Weiser, Jim Miel, and Casey Moore are all hitting above the .500 mark. Weiser has 13 hits on 34 at bats for a team-leading .547 average. But Miel, who is hitting .524 (14 hits in 27 at bats) is ranked eighth in state, while Weiser is unranked. Moore, who also has a team-leading .477 average (11 hits in 23 at bats).

Shortstop, Tim Mahoney leads the Hawks, and the state, in triples with three. Overall, the Hawks are ranked second in team offense with a .326 batting average (in only 265 team at bats, however). Two other NAC conference teams, Rock Valley and Trion, are also ranked in the top ten in batting.

Rock Valley, which dropped two games to Trion in the only conference games played to date, is seventh with a .306 team batting average. Trion, meanwhile, is eighth with a .287 team batting average.

Brian Barch elected chairman of the board

by WENDY WINKELBAKE
Brian Barch, a 19 month member of the Harbinger Board of Trustees, was elected chairman of the board at last Thursday's board meeting.

Barch will be taking the position over from Jean Klusman who served as chairman for the past two years. Klusman felt that she did not have the time to serve as chairman for another term and moved that the board elect someone who did. Trustee George Daecher moved that Barch be elected by acclamation with a second coming from Trustee Shirley Mamon. "This came as a surprise since I haven't been campaigning for chairman. Mrs. Klusman has done an excellent job. As she said it takes a lot of time and effort and she felt it was time to turn over the job," explained Barch.

The new chairman position, however, will be filled by Klusman. Jean Bove held the position as secretary since through acclamation.

Formerly, the board met every second Thursday of the month. This brought about some difficulty with the college's financial dealings in order to reduce these difficulties and to fit the member's schedule more easily, it was decided that regular meetings would be switched to the fourth Thursday of the month. As explained by Dr. Daecher, this will clear out the month financially before the meeting. This new schedule will take effect immediately with the next meeting set for May 22.

According to the Public Community College Act, 5100-2.80, the board is required to completely canvass all elections within ten days of election date. This canvassing includes an inspection of all returns a tallying of the votes in each precinct and a declaration by resolution of the election results. Canvassing of the April 12 election was completed by Mamon. Elsie Bower, college relations, and Dan Cash, of the college's business department.

In the April 12 election incumbents Barch, Bove and Davis Tomschek retained their seats with an overwhelming victory over challenger John Pulli. Bove led the way in the race for the three year term with 1,810 votes while Tomchek and Barch wrapped up 1,771 votes and 1,666 votes respectively. Pulli received 1,008 votes.

"I did expect the incumbents would be reelected based on the past record at school so far in planning, not rushing into building a second campus, and helping to bring financial changes to the school."

Jean Klusman Vice-Chairman Board of Trustees

"I did expect that the incumbents would be reelected based on the past record at school so far in planning, not rushing in building a second campus and helping to bring financial changes to the school," commented Klusman who overcame Challenger Suzanne Clouse by an approximate 5:1 margin in the race for a one year term. Klusman received 1,277 votes with Clouse collecting 2,538.

Despite the loss, Clouse plans to remain involved in board proceedings and get more involved with community affairs. She went on to say that while she did lose the election she scored a personal victory.

"I had six weeks to become credible. I started out knowing nothing. I had to knock on doors and talk about issues so that I would be credible. I knew nothing about nothing. I had to learn fast and make a name that was recognized in the community," she said.

Clouse plans to run for a board seat in the next election but at this time, is unsure whether it will be for a one year or three year term.

The board now moves into the usual budget hearings for the next academic year with the first set for tonight.

"It's like the same cast of characters with a different script. We deal with all kinds of current problems (the child care center fence, the budget hearings, etc.) and with whatever else comes along," concluded Mrs. Bove.

Harbinger receives first class award

The Harbinger student newspaper has received a First Class rating for first semester issues from the National Scholastic Press Assn. Associated Collegiate Press.

The newspaper received Marks of Distinction in two of the five categories in the evaluation: Editorial Leadership and Opinion Features and Physical Appearance and Visual Communication. In his message of the Harbinger, the judge stated editorially are "relevant and responsible," and the paper is a "well-planned package." Features on financial aid available at Harper, written by Wendy Winkelbake, coverage of an organizational program for "high risk" students, written by Pete Wicklund, and the Harbinger poll of student evaluation of faculty, written by Don McLaugh were singled out by the judge for special recognition.

The evaluation of student newspapers is done twice a year by NSP-ACP, which has been offering the service since 1951.

Trustee Malkowski maps out term

by MIKE BANBACH
John R. Malkowski officially took the position of Student Trustee last Tuesday, and has already mapped his battle plan for the 1980 school year.

Malkowski, who won the Student Trustee election by a narrow vote, has adopted two main goals and subdivided these into smaller, longer term goals.

"I need the cooperation of the media," said Malkowski, who was honorably discharged from the army with the rank of sergeant.

"With the help of the media, I will be able to present my views to the student body and are their views to communicate with the Board of Trustees," said Malkowski.

The media Malkowski is referring to, of course, is the Harbinger and WRCM.

Malkowski's biggest opponent, as was with Clouse, will be student apathy. "Once the students know they can use their voice through me," said Malkowski, "they will be motivated to use it and become more involved with Harper."

Malkowski is zealous about his new responsibility. He emphasizes the importance of communication between the Student Trustee and Student Senate to present the Board of Trustees with "what the students want."

Malkowski is adamant about finding out what the students feel about specific issues. He has proposed writing a monthly column on the Harbinger to present issues to the student body enclosed with a coupon asking the students to "tell me how I should vote."

Malkowski is convinced that "if I could get 300 responses, it would carry a big voice into the Board of Trustee meetings."

Malkowski, who also formed the Engineering Club last year, also wants the clubs and organizations at Harper to receive more publicity.

"If the students know what is going on at Harper, they will at least know what they're missing," he said.

More adamantly does Malkowski see the need for presenting the knowledge to the student body of what his job is all about. "They don't even know who I am or what my job means. A lot of students think the Student Senate and Student Trustee are high school kids who don't really do anything," he concluded.

THE 'NEWBORN' IN THE COOP

Tired of Harbingers perseverance on apathy

To the appropriate Harbinger editor,

Harper must be a dull career jockey from the Harbinger. It seems as if he is now worthy of student apathy, a certain educator's grandiose opinion of what needs to be done, and sports. This is not to criticize the latter of the three, the sports articles are far and away the most stimulating, and certainly more intellectual.

I am sick and tired of reading about the Harbinger staff's perseverance on student apathy. It seems that your actions are much like the efforts of the farmer who shipped his horse for having the barn door open, and about as effective. Perhaps if the students at Harper perceived the student government as a significant and powerful entity, there would be more interest. Perhaps if there were more publicity about athletic events, people would turn out more. Perhaps students are more interested in their studies and not busy trying to keep their heads above the financial wherldop that often sucks up more than they want to be concerned with student government, attending athletic events, and the like. Maybe their free time is taken up with things like judging, social relations, etc. rather than observing others self. I could run on about this much more, but it's mainly conjecture, and as such, too abstract to be of much use. I do agree with what certain Harbinger editors seem to be insisting, it is healthier to be well rounded in all academic, athletic, and extracurricular activities, etc.

In the concrete side as the Harbinger staff seems to have an abundance of time with which to ponder such important issues as apathy and the ultimate loss playing, perhaps you all would care enough to start a student action column in this one could write the Harbinger and complain about inadequate study areas, library construction, locker room exhibitions, or even the Johns backing up. And, in reply, the Harbinger staff showing what a crack staff they really are, would dispatch a reporter to investigate, ask penetrating questions, and publish the results.

Just think what would happen if the Harbinger actually helped get results. These could be published and the students, seeing an effective organization in action, would be more inclined to respond. The Harbinger could be a key tool in combating the very apathetic stance that you all have stressed over for so long.

It could be argued that this suggestion would not be effective or feasible. One could also argue about the dangers of creating the student or fraternal title. Why not give it a try? I thought I did and seemed to get good results. Granted, the resources of the Harbinger are limited. In your recent article regarding the proposed tuition increase, you have compared Harper Jr. College to the nearby four year colleges, Northern Illinois University, Northeastern Illinois University, and the University of Illinois at Chicago. I believe this is not an accurate comparison. You can not compare apples with oranges. Harper does not have the professionalization, teacher qualification course selection or social activity that a four year college has. It is a student body in order to get those things that the student body wants. Harper is less expensive than the nearby four year colleges, you are paying for what you get. Why not compare Harper to the nearby junior colleges, Dakota Community College, Truman Jr. College and College of Du Page? Harper far exceeds the nearby junior colleges in cost per semester hour. If the proposed increase should do its effect, Harper will be $7.00 per semester hour over Dakota Community College's present cost. Harper does not have any qualifications over Dakota Community College that justify this difference.

Tuition comparison

If Harper would better utilize their funds, perhaps there would be no need to increase the tuition. Harper students can not be made responsible for Harper's mismanagement of funds. If there are no students, there will be no need for Harper Jr. College. Sincerely yours, R. Thompson 428 0206 ext. 375

Trustee speaks out

A tuition increase has been proposed. Do you know the student body feels, not the STUDENT TRUSTEE. The student trustee is elected to voice the opinion of the student body in order to get those things that the student body wants. Would you like to see one person or one hundred people better? Suggest me during my term in office and voice your opinion. Reply to the questions I ask. It'll give you the information in an attempt to get you interested in the school, but use your voice and let's get things done our way. YOU HAVE A VOICE - USE IT! Student Trustee John R. Malkowski

Trustee brings back drive, desire, enthusiasm

Although he is the "new kid on the block," John Malkowski, newly elected Student Trustee has made diligent effort to reach the Student Trustee.

Malkowski is easily available to students and can be seen strolling around the campus at almost any given time. The winner of the election by three votes has already mapped out his main goals of the term. He has set as the highest priority of his administration the cooperation of the media in his fight against student apathy. Malkowski feels that through the media he can reach more students, pick up on their views and then voice this opinion to the Board of Trustees. He has proposed writing a monthly column for the Harbinger to present issues to the student body and to seek advice on which way to vote on the issues. Malkowski is also seeking the help of WINCM in the campaign against apathy.

Although it may seem that all of this is merely talk, the fact remains that Malkowski is reaching out to various organizations, unlike past administrations. He obviously has organizational abilities; he single-handedly organized the Engineering Club.

Seemingly unlike past representatives, Malkowski seems to have the drive and enthusiasm to follow through on these promises. He has an obvious interest in improving the quality of student representation and the desire to redefine the importance of the student body voice.

The fact remains that it is still quite early in his term and only Father Time will tell if he can really accomplish these goals or become just another target for lethargic students.

Students raises responsibility question

Wendy Wukelaha, "Editor in Chief"

I personally have never been involved in this little "war" you Mike Simkus has been having with you the Harper student body. But after one re-education issue (March 21 April 1), I am already sick of it.

Now, I have read most of Mike's columns. Whether or not I agree or disagree with him is totally beside the point. It is my own belief that all criticism is of no real value anyway, and I don't really care what he thinks. What I am objecting to is your fatal lack of responsibility as the form seems inappropriate in a journal. I have never seen human expression mentioned so many times in one newspaper. I Jeff Lynn's Daarrah. I thought I would start to write. I don't see Wendy, how you could have allowed that cheap and petty garbage to be published. Mr. Barnaby's article of name, undecipherable gibberish was bad enough, but as I read on, matters got worse.

I have never struck another human being in all my life, but when Mike told me at the end of his satiric article what I could do with my newspaper, and called me a fool on top of that, I can readily see why some people would like to give him a sound rap in the mouth. But that would most likely be giving him exactly what he wants. It is nothing but pure cheap rhetoric for the sake of controversy by mindlessly putting down the work of others. If Mike wants to stop argument, just have him stand out on some street corner flashing obscene gestures at passing cars. It would hold just as much enlightenment as his article did.

If by some hideous corruption of justice, any of you in the Harbinger office ever gets a job as a professional journalist, I hope that you will have learned something by then. The March 21/April 1 edition of the Harbinger was more insulting, belittling and humiliating than the worst high school newspaper I have ever seen. Not to me-but to you.

A competent writer would surely be an exaggeration. Work after work, "Moods For Midecup" is a virtual breeding ground for fragmented sentences, run-on and other grammatical errors. I can live with faulty syntax, but what I cannot tolerate is the continual inattentiveness displayed by Simkus towards me and everything. ## 'Moods' criticism valid

Dear Editor,

As a former contributor to the Harbinger, I feel compelled by comment to the recent controversy over Mike Simkus. While I'm no way approve of the above-stated sentence, developed against him, I do believe there is considerable room for criticism.

To say that Simkus is a competent writer would surely be an exaggeration. Work after work, "Moods For Midecup" is a virtual breeding ground for fragmented sentences, run-on and other grammatical errors. I can live with faulty syntax, but what I cannot tolerate is the continual inattentiveness displayed by Simkus towards me and everything. A recent case in point would be his javal at single towards the pain and sufferings of others. It would be difficult for me to imagine that any mature writer would let down such as "The best thing that ever happened in this group is that the lead singer (Don Bent) died" or "I was happy that the Led Zep's had gotten into a car accident and were hurt; get into even the first draft into into the final copy.

Cheap shots are never being journalistic integrity as far as Simkus is concerned. Instead of engaging the legitimate shortcomings of his subjects (e.g. the morality of the live fire's or the compositional stagnation of Rush), Simkus finds it necessary to discuss the physical dimensions of the Bee Gees' reproductive glands and the assumed sexual preferences of Rush's Geddy Lee.

Offer Simkus just plain doesn't know what he's talking about and will occasionally admit to it. He refers to the Wilson sisters of Canada's Heart as "These two girls from who knows where, and who really cares?" He makes im- probably style comparisons such as Heart to Janis Joplin and Van Halen to Grand Funk. And who could forget such as talented criticisms as "The sack rotates eggs" or "I thought I would start to urinate." If it comes that Simkus himself brought up the subject of Freud in raising it is interesting to point out that due to the growing adhesion toward a Simkus himself was quoted as saying, "I can't take anymore of this s---." Perhaps he should take his own advice. "If the guy can't handle stardom then he doesn't belong in the limelight."

Chris Block

'Moods' article shows ignorance

Dear Mr. Simkus,
This is a rebuttal regarding your April 1st article entitled "Take this and use it against me" I have read your articles before and this one shows your true unscrupulous, biased ignorance.

Although it is your opinion and I respect that, but to put down talented individuals, who are all millionaires (after all you are a 21 year old writing for such a prestigious newspaper), none of them wealthy by the age of 21.

The group in particular, Rush, is where you are wrong. Not only are they one of the country's most successful bands, but by the age of 21, they already had two albums. Phil Snel Fleet, the drummer, has an IQ of over 150, making him a genius. Any one of the members of Rush could be a any symphonic orchestra (what other newspaper could you write for "Ritza College, right"? All the members play more than 10 instruments and Geddy Lee is a male (can't you distinguish male, gay? and is not a homosexual, in fact his wife Corinne was Miss Canada

So unless you have the talent that any of these musicians have in their little fingers, or reach a level of competency as a journalist to write for more than a two bit junior college newspaper, I advise you not to make such an ass out of yourself. Who knows, maybe someday someone will like what you print.

Leaser. Hook, Associate Professor of History at Harper, has spent quite a bit of time in Japan. The first time he went was in 1947. "I fell in love with the place," he said, and has been going back ever since.

Hook, who has been teaching here since 1948, took a sabbatical semester at the International Christian University in Tokyo and has also done research work in Japan.

Hook and his wife Tokiko from Japan, and their two children, Nickolas and Mary, visit Japan every four years.

"The last time we went was last summer," said Hook, "and I missed it as soon as I left. They save money for four years and spend two months in Japan. We don't, they miss out on anything. That's why we go every four years. If we went every two, we'd only have half the money to spend," Hook said.

"Japan has adventure. It comes alive with the seasons and the smells. You have to go there. You'll find out what I'm talking about."

Hook has been interested in history for a long time. "When I went to college after I got out of the service, I didn't go to get a teaching degree or even to graduate," he said. "I took courses I had subjects happen to be all English and History courses." By the time Hook was in his junior year he was told he had a History major-English minor.

"At that point I said to myself, I think I'll stay and get a Masters. I still had one and one-half years left on my GI bill after I learned my back was so I stayed."

All the courses he took were aimed at teaching or teaching in what he chose.

"History is significant but I don't think it's the most important thing in life. It's not a life or death situation," Hook said. "Most of my students realized that a long time ago. You've got to have something in life. Teaching history is not my top priority. It may be sixth or seventh on my list. I really don't know."

But Hook has had "fun" teaching. "I enjoy it but it's not my life."

In 1961 Hook had a program "Summer 61" for a year on WISN TV, Channel 12, from 6:30-7 a.m.

"It was hard at first. I was teaching live bodas in a classroom and then I had to adapt to teaching in a little red light on top the camera - and still maintain neatness," Hook said.

Teacher Feature

By KARIN JOHNSON

The show ran half hour with no commercials, "it was a 20-minute, 20 second thing with the camera on me." But Hook said it was "interesting." "I met a lot of nice and funny people in the process."

All in all, I've had a pretty varied 20 years in teaching," Hook said. "I've taught all grades from second up for short periods of time."

He has taught Machine Drawing, South American History, all sorts of wild, weird things to high school students," Hook said.

But teaching at Harper is "Probably the thing I have found most satisfying these last 12 years."

At times, Hook's students may think he's "tough" but "I give them 10 minutes and I have respect to get something to return. I give it my best shot and when students don't come to class for four or five weeks I get peaked. But I try to keep it in perspective. Only a few will go on in history, the rest will just go on."

In his leisure time, Hook likes to play his five-string banjo. He used to teach banjo at the Old Town School of Folk Music in Chicago. "Playing a song all the way through without any mistakes makes me happy," he said.

He is also interested in collecting original comic strip art, animated cartoon features and Jazz LP's from the 1920-30 era. "Actually, I stopped collecting the records when I ran out of space with 200 78 RPM's already in my home."

What is his food in life? "I've accomplished a lot of goals - things relating to my family. I like to see them happy," he said. "I'd like to play my banjo at Carnegie Hall but since that will never happen, I'll just stay here, retire, visit Japan occasionally and that's about it."

STEREO

Stereo shop not after your dollar

Summer time is almost here. It means going to the lake and hanging about. But, it also means many of us will be working more and having a little more spending money to spend on those things that, over the past year, we have not had the money for.

Many of us will probably buy stereo equipment. And, let's not forget about those income tax returns that most of us will get. I can qualify stereo equipment. Many of the things I buy are termed "extras." Yes, and much of it was quite expensive. As a matter of fact, almost every piece I own costs at least $500. Better not let them and I did find out about that. With all the stereo gear that I have now, I still walk into the audio showroom and appreciate that I need. You could easily buy the same gear as I have for a third of the cost. For that matter, you could buy your own equipment at quite reasonable prices elsewhere.

But, where do you buy a good gear for cheap price? Well, the best advice anyone can give you before you start shopping around is, know your limits. You've got to have a good idea on how much you are going to spend before any audio showroom can help you. Now comes the most important step. And I can not stress how important this step is. And that is finding a reputable retailer and honest stereo shop. I have found one and it is Stereo Studio.

Moods for Moderns
by MIKE SIMKEN

I have a salesman who knows me by first name, and let's me know whenever there is a new product on the market that I should know about. You know, he's kind of like my former banker salesman. He cares. I find that quite extraordinary in this day and age where there have a glut of stereo shops, who guarantee service with a smile. I can easily say without any reservations that Ron Kravich of Stereo Studio, is excellent in his field of specialty.

I had been harmed many times by the stereo shops that promised me service with my purchase. It really seemed that once I was paid in full, and could take my equipment home, my salesperson could not remember my name, nor could they be found. Until the very first time I went to the Stereo Studio. I can make most consumers angry and discouraged.

I recently talked with Ron about college students and stereo gear. He said that you can buy good gear for cheap prices. For $200 you could get a set out of here with a complete system, that would put every other stereo you could buy from any of the shops, or for that matter one of the department stores to shame." he said.

If, in fact, you have never been to Stereo Studio, you will notice that they carry numerous items on the computer are probably unfamiliar with names like JBL, KEE, Mitsubishi, Ska, Sagenes, Grace, and the list goes on and on.

"Why does this shop carry so many names that are basically unheard of?" I asked Ron.

"Well, we check out every piece that is printed in the trade journals. Usually though, these journals come out every three months and are quite discriminating. Nothing unless it is good, gets any kind of attention from their boys. Then we buy a few samples of it and test it out. We will make critique and decide if we should carry the line. Most often, companies that make one kind of product such as Grace, who make tape cartridges, will make fantastic equipment unlike the companies that advertise in the big stereo magazines. You know, that one of our magazine critic say about a product when the company advertises very heavily in that magazine. The journals we use carry no advertisements at all. Most of the companies like Sony for instance, make a few fantastic products. But they may pour too much money into research for one product and leave themselves in a others. Sony does make the best television sets, by the way."

It is worth noting, by that I mean having stereo gear piece by piece, though it may be quite expensive." I asked.

Limited, we're not all broke-tellers. But it's fun to buy one at a time if you can take it easy. Is your furniture through here, unless you could easily walk out of here with a good stereo for $500.

And with that I left Ron to sit and critique a new pair of Kef atts. They had just gotten in from England.

Probably the biggest thing that surprised me about the Stereo Studio is that Ron spent three hours in the showroom helping me pick out a suitable. And (then he did not ask me if I wanted to buy one, instead he told me to shop around and LISTEN. Of course, I came back and bought the Denon 100 with a Grace F-100 cartridge. Needless to say Stereo Studio is hard to find, but well worth the effort, they make that old cliché sound very true.

There are three showrooms in Harger's area. They are located in Schaumburg, Arlington Heights, and Crystal Lake.

'Are we compatible?'

"Dear Juli: Could you please tell me how compatible I am with a close friend of mine? (Please keep all births in formation confidential)."

The would think that with all the love-prone persons roaming around Harger's campus these days, I would have received many questions of this sort already. Especially since one of the key benefits stemming from astrological analysis is that of knowing how compatible one person may be with another, in what ways, and if it's permanent or just a passing fancy. The branch of astrology which deals with these questions is referred to as Synastry.

Before interpreting two charts for compatibility, I first look at each one independently to see exactly what kind of personalities are portrayed. (They often get a clear picture of both individuals do I start comparing notes. So here goes.

You seem to be a conservative, responsible and practical person on the outside, with a lot of sensitivity and feelings inside. (Others may see you as self-reliant and occasionally shy or worrisome.) You've got ambition, high ideals, and probably value, as much as you enjoy, a good education, discipline, social involvement and children. Someday you may have quite a few children of your own.

The best "mate" for you, as indicated by the seventh house, would be one of the water signs: Pisces, Scorpio, Cancer, or

Astro Awareness

by JULI REKAL

someone who has their qualities of compassion, creativity, idealism and emotion.

Your friend seems to be quite a bit different: unconventional, erratic, very independent, assuming responsibility when necessary, but would rather be without it. He may have difficulty in forming close relationships, definitely trying to detach himself from any romanticism or "love" feelings. He likes to keep everything serious and controlled. He definitely needs freedom to roam, and LOTS of personal appreciation, without heavy demands.

How does that fit your picture? The planet Mercury in his chart falls in the water sign Pisces. His perception, thought process and way of communication should reflect his emotions. This would strike a pleasant note with your inner nature, making you both feel at ease communicating with each other. So far, that's good. He has three planets in Capricorn, as you do, so you both could share the same attitudes towards ambitions. This also would indicate that you could relate well to each other's ambitions in a practical sense.

The relation of his Sun to your chart as a whole symbolizes that he may feel he would have to go through many adjustments to please you. With his independent streak, I don't know if he would be willing to do this. He has an unusual approach towards life, and with his "I don't particularly care what anyone else thinks" attitude, you may at times become very frustrated, because you are the type of person who does care for and need social approval.

Basically, it seems as if though both of you can get along very well and have quite a bit in common. You probably can enjoy a satisfying relationship at the moment. But I would say that the relationship would be complementary, or in other words, you may not always bring out the best in each other. As you mature, you may find it more difficult getting along, and you would both have to put in effort to keep things running smoothly. Personally, I'd like to see things getting better for people instead of harder. But if you've got the will to make things go, then you've also got the chance. Good Luck!

Anyone wishing an astrological interpretation please contact specific questions along with the required birth data to the Harbinger office located in Bldg. A-2, Lock. there for further details.

SOFTBALL

Softball should stop playing now

Team fights snow, not opponents

By JOE KUNEK
If the goal now she would be the most successful coach in Harper history.

In their abbreviated season, women's softball coach Lynn Hitchcock and her team have swept past three opponents to rack up an awe-inspiring 3-0 record.

The team started the season by knocking off Northwestern University with a come-from-behind 3-4 victory. Leading the offensive attack was catcher Debbie Dika who banged out a three-run homer. The Hawks set the game only managed four hits but made the most of their opportunities to walk past Eigen 1-4. Their last time out on the field diamond was their best showing yet, with a 10-0 passing of Thornton with pitcher Pat Tarward twirling a one-hitter.

"I'm real happy that we're 3-0," said Hitchcock whose team will travel to Rock Valley for a game Thursday. "So far our pitching has pulled us through. It's definitely our strong point

You can have all the hitters you want but you still need pitching to get the other team out."

Maize, pitching the team's strong point is sophomore Pat Tarward. Tarward in three games has only surrendered four hits, opponent's runs coming off of Harper errors and walks.

Another one playing flawlessly has been first baseman Betty Hanson who has not committed an error all season while playing first base. She also is currently the team's leading hitter.

Hitchcock has settled on Sue Goethin to handle the shortstop duties with Mary Ann Larson playing third base. Hitchcock also had praise for the play of Judy Waterbury, Carol Carucci and the leadership of freshman Viv Westner.

"The attitude on the team has really picked up," said Hitchcock. "It's been a complete turnaround, before they would just sit around and wait until I arrived. Now they start practing on their own. Debbie Dika and Viv Westner have emerged as the leaders on this team. They will say 'let's go' and start throwing the ball around and get practice start-off."

The team, like everyone else spent much of their practice time during vacation indoors and limited on what the team could work on.

"We had two snow outs, here, ridiculous," said Hitchcock. "We would practice outside on Sunday and then walk out Monday and there was snow on the ground. It blew our minds. I'm glad to get back outside, they were starting to act snooty."

"We worked on hitting with overhead pitching and our attitude. I think we went out through nationals and advance to regionals this year."

But for now, Hitchcock should pray for more rain and retiree unobscured.

"Fearsome Five" comprise women's track

By JOE KUNEK
Looking on the bright side, women's track coach Bruce Zeltner has enough for a basketball team.

At least that's more than they had last year when there was no team and three thousand dollars. The women's gymnastic team back to life.

"The team's attitude is terrific," said Zeltner, who earlier in the year brought the women's gymnastic team back to life. "They work in practice and they help each other out during practice. Haven't known how much Bill M. has helped us with our practice schedule. It's being hurt because of the weather."

"It's always good to have at least one fairly decent, no division when building a team and Zeltner got more than a fair performer when Vlamis returned.

Rolling Meadows graduate Vlamis won the IHSAA gold medal for the district and had continued success in her specialty as she qualified for nationals last year.

"She is the ideal athlete for a coach to want," said Zeltner. "She's super dedicated and I never have to push her to practice. Right now, Sue is working on her technique and getting more power out of her throws. Her goal is to throw 120 feet, which will qualify her for nationals. She hasn't hit it in a meet yet, but she has done 120 feet in practice. Only she has only four meets left to do it in."

"I'm also putting her in ahead this year. Last year, she gave it up and when I asked her to do it again she just laughed. She has the attitude that she has to be equal to or better than her competitors, which is a terrific attitude to have."

In her first meet of the year at the Wisconsin Davis at Kenosha Vlamis took second in the discus with a throw of 115 feet. She was also and placed fifth in the shotput.

Zeltner also has a great one on some points out of Sue Miescher. The graduate of Fremd has been competing in the high jump, hurdles, long jump and running some sprints.

"Sue is another super dedicated athlete. She doesn't quit and always gives 100 percent," said Zeltner, who also coached Miescher in high school.

"Sue is a very quiet person, she doesn't talk much so you never know what she's thinking. Once in a while she'll give me a funny look when we have a hard workout. She's been a consistent 4 feet 10 inches in the high jump. She has the form and run-down, she just needs a more explosive lift to get more height."

"She just works and works and works," commented Zeltner. "Judy is hurt in the javelin but her height. Sue has the power, but can't get the leverage needed because of her stature. But she's another with a terrific attitude and always works hard."

Founding out the team are Cheryl Levinson and Anne Beringer. Levinson, according to Zeltner is running sprints and mainly concentrating on the 200-yard dash. Beringer has been running the 100-yard dash and throwing the shotput.

Harper hosts a meet Thursday, April 24, with Concordia, Northern and Triton at 8:30 p.m.

"We won't be able to win any big meets with the number of people we have, but we'll be able to score some points," said Zeltner, who hopefully will be making a trip to San Angelo, Texas, in May with a couple of Harper track people.

Harper splits pair with Rock Valley

By MIKE BARMANN

Nine were enough for Harper baseball coach Wally Reynolds as the Hawks (finally) played their first 'Nac' conference game last Thursday, splitting with Rock Valley, 6-2 and 7-6.

"We weren't into the first game," said Reynolds, who was relieved the Hawks were able to play at all. After nine consecutive rain-outs and a 13-day lay-off, Reynolds admitted his team "just couldn't function" as the Hawks dropped Game 1 of their 'Nac' double-header with the Trojans, 4-0.

"It wasn't that we weren't mentally ready to play, it was that we weren't sharp," said Reynolds.

The Hawks did take a 1-0 first inning lead when Brian Sander, who had singled to left with two out, scored on Jim Miett's RBI double. The Hawks scored again in the third when Tim Maloney, who had stolen second after being hit by a pitch, scored on Sander's second single. Rock Valley, however, took advantage of four Harper errors, scoring two runs in the second inning, one in the fourth, and their final run in the fifth.

An Act Agreement was the liner, evening his record at 1-1. Miett, who raised his batting average to .877 with his composite 4-for-8 day, scored the Hawks' first run of Game 2.

"He's our spiritual leader," said Reynolds. "He carried the second inning when the Hawks were trailing 3-0 and said, 'Forget the strategy, just hit the ball.'"

Miett rallied Harper with a single followed by Jim Berg's double. Bill Laine sacrificed fly-scoring Miett, Bill Moran's single (scoring Berg), and an error by the pitcher scoring Moran.

The Trojans got to winning pitcher Bill Cobe, who struck out eight while giving up four earned runs, for another run in the bottom half of the second inning.

The Hawks scored three more runs in the third, however, after Brian Sander tripled, catcher Brian Wessler's single, Miett's double, and Casey Moore's single.

Rock Valley cut the Hawks lead to 6-5 in the fifth when Bill Schenberger, who has 23 stolen bases in 24 attempts already this year, stole second after singling and then scoring on another Trojan single.

Laramie ended an insurance run in the sixth, though, on a 3rd-out home run. It was his first career home run. "I think without the lay-off," said Reynolds, "we'd have had a better chance to win both games." Rock Valley dipped to 2-3 in 'Nac' play behind Triton (6-0) and Joliet (5-1). The Hawks are 1-3 in 'Nac' play, and 8-4 overall. Harper's home field has given nine runs out of 11 teams with win/loss records. "We don't have any glaring weaknesses," he said, "but we don't have any glaring strengths either."

EVERY PITCH ALL students react on for the baseball field during the Faculty vs. Students game. There was only one problem during the game, the faculty never showed. (photo by Jim Hawk)

Reynolds on it, no doubt about it."

The Hawks now will play six conference games in the next two weeks. Reynolds' only worry will be if the pitching can hold up to that stretch.

"We play double-headers so our schedule is going to really press our pitchers." Evaluating his team, Reynolds calls the defense, pitching, and hitting solid. "We don't have any glaring weaknesses," he said, "but we don't have any glaring strengths either."

Point of View out soon

The annual literary and art magazine "Point of View," will be distributed within the last two weeks this semester staff members reported last week. The magazine will include 40 pieces of art work including paintings, drawings, photography, and photos of sculpture. Also included in the magazine will be 23 pieces of literary work.

"The magazine went to the printer (last Wednesday) morning and we expect the proofs back within 10 to 15 days," said Debbie Wurster one of the staff editors. "Proofs" are used as a final check for any errors in the rough drafts before the final product is printed.

This year's magazine will include a full color cover and the inner pages will be printed in a duotone, of black on a maroon. An actual painting will be featured on the cover. The magazine's advisor Gene Tierney said he expects a "good product" this year.

The magazine will be distributed throughout the campus and will be free. Student activities funds the production cost for the magazine.

Elections postponed till fall

Due to a lack of applicants, the spring student Senate Elections have been postponed until next fall. Activities Director Jean Fankants said that the elections will probably take place earlier than usual next fall.

Ms. Fankants said that interest in the elections as well as preparing for them was "just not there this spring. Students have a lot of things on their minds at this time of year."

final, summer jobs, "vacation," Fankants added. The spring election idea has been attempted before and results were similar.

Fall elections are usually held by the sixth and seventh week of school to let clubs and organizations to get going. However, Ms. Fankants said she was looking in to having the senate elections earlier so that the senate would not be inactive for long during the school year.

Lectures snaps phenomenon

Authors Flo Conway and Jim Siegelman will lecture on "Snapping the Cult Phenomenon" at Harper College on Tuesday, April 23. The lecture is scheduled for 8 p.m. in the College Center Lounge.

Conway and Siegelman use the term "snapping" to describe the sudden, drastic personality changes that occur among members of religious cults such as the Unification Church, Scientology, or Hare Krishna. Changes are also seen in persons subjected to mass marketed sensitivity training and transcendental meditation. The authors will discuss mind altering techniques used by cult groups including isolation, repulsive chanting, monotonous music, lack of sleep, improper nutrition and some methods borrowed from cisium, Freudian therapy and Skinnerian behavior modification.

Conway and Siegelman maintain that anyone might be vulnerable to these sophisticated cult techniques that destroy a person's free will. The authors' findings, which are based on four years of research and hundreds of interviews, cause them to take a strong stand on the current controversy over freedom of religious versus freedom of thought. Public admission to the lecture is $1.50. Harper students with activity cards attend free.

O'Connor named shining J-student

Harper student Margaret O'Connor was named the outstanding sophomore Journalism student at the department's seventh annual awards ceremony held here Monday, April 21.

Instructors, students, and graduates of the program gathered to honor the winner and the two runners up.

As the winner of the top award, Mrs. O'Connor has maintained a 3.8 grade point average and has submitted excellent work in the two-year program.

Margaret O'Connor is a member of Phi Theta Kappa, an honor society for community and junior colleges, and is a Trustee's Honor Student. She presently works part time for the Barrington Press.

"I think the Journalism program has an outstanding reputation," she said, "and I'm sure employers will take note of the award."

The two runners up were Francine Bloom and Terri Higgins.

Francine Bloom, also on the Trustee's Honor List, was photo editor for the Voice, a paper put together by students in a sophomore journalism class. She was editor of This Is Harper College On The Air, a news/cast put together by students and broadcast on WMMM-FM Miss Bloom is also the business manager of the Video Club.

Terri Higgins was an area editor for the Voice and was also producer and editor for This Is Harper College On The Air. She is on the Trustee's Honor List and has been offered a position with Northshore Magazine.

Senate gives tuition poll

The Harper Board of Trustees have proposed a tuition increase of $1 per semester hour for the next year. The purpose of the hike is to keep up with rising inflation.

Harper is only one college proposing tuition increases. Massachusetts Institute of Technology has announced it will increase its tuition by 17 percent for next year.

Harper has almost been forced to raise tuition because the school gets its revenue from three sources: taxes, state reimbursements, and tuition.

"Tuition is the only revenue we can control," said Don Stanbury, director of registration and registrar.

Harper College is proposing a tuition increase of $1 per semester hour, to $19 from the present $18 per hour. The Student Senate and Trustee wish to consider how this would affect student enrollment. We would appreciate your response on this matter.

Please check one of the following

"ANOTHER CASE OF MALAISE, I'M AFRAID! WE'VE HAD AN EPIDEMIC EVER SINCE THE NEW HAMPSHIRE PRIMARY."

Editorial

Board must realize they're not irreplaceable

The Board of Trustees got a really big boost in the arm from community members in the recent board elections.

Four incumbents ran in the election and, low and behold, all four members retained their seats on the Board. Brain Barch, Jan Bone, and Dave Tomcheck kept their seats with a victory over challenger John Poll while Joan Klusman beat out Suzanne Ciscoe for the one year seat.

It is apparent that the community is pleased with the past record of the board and wishes to continue with current policy. It is imperative for the Board to realize that although the community reelected them to their seats it does not mean that they have a steadfast seat.

As long as the board continues to work for the benefit of the community and students, it will not be challenged. But, it is not irreplaceable.

Phi Theta Kappa lacks coverage

Dear Editor,

I am the president of Phi Theta Kappa, the campus branch of the national honor fraternity. Along with my vice-president, Joanne Calkins, I wrote an article describing our organization and its activities. Along with this, one of your photographers took pictures of our new initiates at our luncheon in March. In our article we included the date, time and place for our next meeting. This was set for April 21.

My vice-president and I had our sponsor, Marilyn Swanson, turn in the letter personally as last semester we had the same problem. We felt that by including the meeting date you would be certain to run our article in your paper before that date.

To our surprise, you did not, and still have not run our article. You may want until the last week of school like you did last semester.

This makes the initiates waiting to see the article and myself feel that your newspaper is self-serving for the benefit of your budding journalists. I will continue to read the paper, but please try to remember that without the students you would not have your newspaper.

Sincerely,
Maribeth T Cardott

Locker rooms require clarification

Dear Editor:

The recent Harbinger article concerning building M locker rooms requires clarification. The article implied that it is common, accepted practice for unchained males to be in the women's locker room. That is not the case, I assure you.

For reasons of economy, the men's and women's locker rooms are located on either side of a common training room. Therefore, it is possible that a person could enter the wrong locker room by accident if appropriate doors are not locked and if signs are not read which designate men's or women's facilities.

It is not the intention or the practice for men and women to be sharing locker rooms. The two incidents cited in the Harbinger article were in all probability, accidental.

I appreciate the concern expressed by the Harbinger reporter.

Careful attention will be given to insure that doors are secured as appropriate and additional signs will indicate the respective locker rooms to prevent future incidents such as the two alluded to in the Harbinger article.

Sincerely,
John Gelch
Associate Dean
Physical Education,

Do not condemn; offer helping hand instead

Dear editor:

I am a former columnist for the campus newspaper, the Harbinger. I enjoyed the learning experience of writing about a subject that I love so much, that being nutrition and exercise. I enjoyed working with the staff and respected the contributions they made.

Since then, I have worked hard to achieve my associate of arts degree. On this quest, I have taken various courses in a number of specific fields. In taking these classes, I have often listened to teacher comments which tear apart the efforts of students trying to achieve a decent newspaper. Their comments range from, and I quote, "it's a rag" to "humorous statements saying it's dull and good for a laugh." I have often felt down hard on my tongue to restrain myself from telling those so-called critics off, but I owed my grades so I let it pass. Well, now I'm in my last semester here at Harper and a certain member of the English Department made the rage in me finally ignite. His comments about the Harbinger prompted me to write this letter. Now it is my turn to be a critic.

First of all Harper is a learning institution, we are not professional journalists or scientists. If we were, we wouldn't be here. How can one condemn a learning experience such as writing for a newspaper? My argument against these professionals is they are so intent on destroying the efforts of a newspaper why don't they get off their duffs and do something about it? If a system is not functioning to a certain capacity we usually change it don't we? Why not the newspaper? Why don't these critics help the writers by giving them suggestions or offering their talents to the paper? By giving a helping hand we learn to be better in anything we do.

Encourage us don't condemn us. After all, we are just students; you're the teachers. So teach us.

If one wishes to critique this piece of work, I'm not hard to find, offer your talents to make me a better letter writer. Vincent Surdo

Hawkins in love with her job

by MARIN JOHNSON
Margaret Hawkins, art teacher here at Harper, loves her craft. She's a painter, a drawer, a teacher, an artist, a writer.

"I like to paint and I try to do so on a regular basis, but I especially like to draw because it's more direct. Everything I do is a drawing. I put it on the longest wall in my apartment. With all her work, she either stores, hangs, destroys or gives it away.

Recently out of graduate school in North Carolina, Ms. Hawkins has been teaching here part-time for two semesters. She teaches art Semester and Art Orientation.

"In art, with close observation, inanimate things become animate. I like to look at things," Ms. Hawkins said. "There's something mystical about observing, then I paint I like the act better than what I get afterwards. There's something sacred about the act. I don't just do it to make pictures."

Ms. Hawkins took plenty of art classes in high school. "I figured I'd study art in college but I wasn't sure," Hawkins said. She attended the University of Illinois because "I knew I could take anything once I was there. After Graduate School I knew I wanted to be a teacher."

"THERE'S SOMETHING mystical about observing," then I paint," said Margaret Hawkins, art teacher. (Photo by Rick Kohske)

"I had a brilliant teacher who had consciousness - causing seminars and all sorts of erratic things. She confirmed my thoughts of teaching," Hawkins said.

Ms. Hawkins loves to spend her time painting or drawing. If she wants to "get loose" she works with water colors, but "not everyone is an artist."

"It's not something people should feel they have to go out and do to complete their repertoire. It's like going to an Italian restaurant just to try it! You don't have to do it," she said.

Hawkins also loves to read. "I read so much. I read everything - from art criticism to fiction to recipes to comic books all in one day."

She also loves to travel, loves good food, good conversation and really good jobs.

"I'm so easily satisfied. I like to look at things - alleys, backyards, valleys. I just love to go places and look at things."

Her favorite place in the Outer Banks is the Islands off North Carolina. "Those people speak differently from any other people in the United States. And there are so many different birds."

Aside from teaching and painting, Ms. Hawkins is also a writer. She is writing reviews for a local paper. "I don't know what direction my writing will take though. Writing is such a private thing. Instead of just looking at a painting people have to read your work which takes intelligence - let alone a willingness to read," she said.

For the future she'd like to keep painting. "I want to find a place to support myself and my habit (painting). I'd also like to teach full-time somewhere."

Are Dadaists ever understood?

"gadji beri bimba glandridi laula lonni cadori gad-jama gramma berida bimbala glandria g'lassossa gadji beri bin biass glassiala laula lonni cadorisa Godjima luffni i gimzalla binbama gigia wowlonni bin"

Hugo Ball.

When Hugo Ball first spoke the above lyric, the audience applauded and went crazy. Never before had any artist attempted something so new, so crazy, and yet so original. Hugo Ball, the Dada person in poetry, said of his first evening, "The accents became heavier, the emphasis stronger, the consonants harsher. I very soon realized that my powers of expression were not going to be adequate to match the pomp of my staging if I wanted to remain serious, and this I wanted above all things. And like Hugo Ball, Public Image Limited, re anti-establishment artists.

Lynn Van Matre of the Chicago Tribune, said recently that the P.I.L. "Second Edition" lp, "that it is terrible." If in fact she was understanding Public she would understand Public Image Limited.

Public Image Limited is fronted by John Lydon, who as many of us know was the vocalist of the Sex Pistols. I'm sure that Mr. Lydon would like to forget everything about the Sex Pistols, so I will not berate the same any longer (there is probably too much written already).

Mr. John Lydon said it best concerning the Sex Pistols in the P.I.L. theme song, "Two sides to every story, somebody had to stop it. I'm not the same as when I began. It's not a game of monopoly. Public Image. You got what you wanted, my public image belongs to me, my entrance is my own creation, my grand finale, my goodbye, public image, do it right."

Van Matre said, "in avant-garde." And with this statement I agree. P.I.L. is far from anything commercial, and, in fact, are artists. Sure, the bass line is pretty simplistic. Sure, the guitar is very elementary. Sure, the vocal can be just barely heard. Sure, the vocals are sometimes spoken. But, you will never find anything like P.I.L. a group who runs a career in the music industry.

Moods for Moderns

by MIKE SIMKUS

In their new lp "Second Edition" or as the import is titled "Metal Box", P.I.L. prove beyond a doubt that they are Dadaists, or anti-rock. In the song "careering," Lydon speaks, "a face is raining across the barrier, the pride of history, the same as murder, is this living?" both sides of the river, there is bacteria, armored machinery mangled, is this living?" Abstract, however? Maybe.

In the song "Bad Baby," a more approachable measure of the subject of rape, Lydon sings, "nearly 39.39. I'm rising above the eye to my best before the rush. Someone left a baby in a car park, never any person, don't you listen, one more sad story, someone is calling, see through the mirrors, calling through the mirrors, don't you listen, one more sad story, someone is calling, don't you listen. "You are probably scratching the back of your head and saying, "the must be on drugs or something." Well, not quite. I've followed P.I.L. for a long time, and I know where they are coming from. Lydon, ever since the creation of the Sex Pistols has been angered by the issues of abortion, rape, anarchy, government, and bureaucratic lie, and the music industry today full of the people who do not give a damn about the music, they care only for the money.

And at what price is the artist to be salvaged? Take a good long listen to your favorite radio station and listen. I'm sure almost 90 percent of the time you will hear music made for money.

Public Image Limited, a group of men fighting to stay unconventional. They are fighting the people who run the music industry today. Are they winning? I think so.

At a recent party of mine, people asked what group did I just play. And I said "oh, that was just a few of the instrumental tracks of P.I.L." It is a shame, long for the people to catch on, but, like ever new art form, it needs to be exposed.

On one of the most startling and possibly the most upsetting pieces on P.I.L. is called "No Birds Do Sing." If you like suburban life or pre-planned life or pre-planned life or pre-planned life, you better read the following lyric of "No Birds." "This could be heaven, the shallow spread of ordered lawn. I like the illusion of privacy, the careful trees blending perfectly. Blasted pre-planned idle luxury. A voice silent dignity. Life in lovely isolated slots. A token sense of continuity. A layered mass of subtle props, mild mannered news, well intentioned rules, to dignify a daily code, lawful standard views, and no birds do sing."

If you like commercial music, you will not like P.I.L. But, if you are tired of hearing the same old commercial banality, buy public image limited, the new Dadaists.

'Better days ahead'

"What is the future outlook for the next 3-6 months?"

Being the curious, anticipating human that we are, this is a question that arises in all of our minds from time to time. We are taught to plan ahead and prepare for our future, but this is not an easy task to accomplish in this day and age. Life is full of complications, and it can be extremely difficult to understand. Through the use of astrology, we can gain practical insight as to the trends that may be coming our way, and why.

After examining your chart, there's no wonder as to why you're interested in finding out what's in store for you. This difficult and uneasy. Many challenges and deep personal changes will draw from you all of your moral strength and ambition. (By now, you're probably thinking that you don't even want to read any more but it's not all that bad, so hang in there.)

Cycle, you have reached a critical point of growth in your life, demanding from you maturity, adjustment, cooperation with others, and a tireless effort for self-analysis and awareness.

You are an extremely sensitive, emotional person. You may tend to be moody, and at times, too, impulsive in your relations with others. Humble, strength, ambition and creativity. You seem to be particularly sensitive to your reputation and social standing because of this, you may take

Astro Awareness

by JULIE REALY

the reactions of other people personally, without realizing that they weren't meant that way. This can be emotionally painful, and it may cause you to withdraw from your relationships in order for you to avoid the whole undercurrent.

May and June may lead you to deal with relationships in this context, creating tension and stress for you. You may experience depressed and pessimistic moods temporarily, but it will pass, as soon as you realize that the conflict is within yourself emotionally. At this point, don't brood over your problems, but confront and deal with them. You may find that if you associate with optimistic groups of people, or situate yourself in a cheerful, calming environment, much of your emotional turbulence can be alleviated.

Towards the end of the summer, things will take a turn for the better. You should find yourself actively seeking new attitudes, renewed vitality and strength. Your self-reliance and courage will be at a peak level.

Your working situation or residence may change in July. September will be a good time for you to initiate changes and new projects. October can mark a turning point for the balance for both your body and soul.

The end of 1980 should slowly bring about a phase of personal development through increased will-power for self-improvement on all levels: spiritual, philosophical, moral and physical. You should experience a transformation of self-identity that can take place as a change in physical appearance as well as that of personality projection.

Throughout the year you should attempt to divert your thoughts into positive channels, avoid too much introspection to maintain good health. (don't make mountains out of molehills) Slow down, beware of expressing rash ideas or actions before you've thought out the consequences. Stay away from large crowds that may tend toward violence (riots, rallies, demonstrations, etc.), because you are prone to accident or injury through this at this time. And, last of all, if you see something coming up sometime within a year that indicates a successful, worthwhile accomplishment achieved, if not a beautiful, inspiring relationship, Good Luck!

WHAT COULD THE ARMY POSSIBLY OFFER A BRIGHT PERSON LIKE YOU?

Drop your guard for a minute.

Even though you're in a two-year college right now, there are many aspects of the Army you might find very attractive. Maybe even irresistible. See for yourself.

ROTC SCHOLARSHIPS

If you're thinking of eventually going to a four-year college, it's not too early to start thinking about an ROTC scholarship.

There are 2-year and even 1-year ROTC scholarships available.

They cover tuition, books, and lab fees. Plus $100 a month living allowance. Naturally, they're very competitive. Because besides helping you towards your bachelor's degree, an ROTC scholarship helps you towards the gold bars of an Army Officer. It's worth looking into.

WINGS & A CHOPPER

With two years of college under your belt, you can get preferential consideration for Warrant Officer Flight Training.

If you pass all the tests and qualify, you'll go through 40 weeks of rigorous and valuable training.

You'll earn the distinctive bars of a warrant officer and the silver wings of an Army aviator. You'll have at least 175 hours of flight instruction, 40 hours with a flight simulator, 4 weeks night qualification, and enough classroom work in aerodynamics, meteorology and aerial navigation to last a lifetime.

The result is a rewarding, responsible and prestigious position as an Army helicopter pilot.

STRIPES FROM THE START

What you've learned in college has already earned you a promotion in the Army.

It's true. If you join the Army with two years of college, you can start two pay grades higher. Instead of being an E-1 with an empty sleeve, you can come in as E-3 with stripes.

It means about $60 more a month in your paycheck. And a lot more opportunity in the long run. Since you'll be literally wearing your education on your sleeve, your talents won't go unnoticed by your superiors.

And starting out right can really help you make the most of the Army.

A BONUS FOR PART-TIME WORK

You can get a $1,500 bonus just for enlisting in some Army Reserve units. Or up to $2,000 in educational benefits.

You also get paid for your Reserve duty. It comes out to about $1,000 a year for 16 hours a month and two weeks annual training.

And there's a special program that lets you fit your Army Reserve active duty around your school schedule.

It's something to consider. Because even if you went to a two-year college because it was less expensive than a four-year college, you know by now that it still isn't cheap.

A CHANCE TO GO ON WITH COLLEGE

If you're thinking you might even go further with your college education, the Army can help there, too.

A few years in the Army can help you get not only the money for tuition, but also the maturity to use it wisely.

The Army has a program in which money you save for college is matched two-for-one by the government. Then, if you qualify, generous bonuses are added to that.

So 2 years of service can get you up to $7,400 for college, 3 years up to $12,100, and 4 years up to $14,100. In addition, bonuses up to $3,000 are available for certain 4-year enlistments in selected skills.

Add in all the experience and maturity you can get, and you can see how the Army can send you back to college a richer person in more ways than one.

We hope these Army opportunities have intrigued you as well as surprised you.

Because there is indeed a lot the Army can offer a bright person like you.

Hawks split with Joliet

The Harper baseball Hawks split with Joliet last Monday in an NAC double-header, losing Game one 7-6 before winning the nightcap 7-4.

The Wolves, now 6-3 in conference play, scored three runs in the second inning and two in third to take an early lead.

The Hawks, however, scored five runs in the bottom of the third to tie the game at 3-3.

Doug Abrams singled with one out, stole second, and went to third on Russ Sander's single to left. Abrams then scored on a pass ball, while Sander and Tim Maloney, who walked prior to Sander's hit, scored on Russ Wisner's double.

Both Jim Misti and Chris Jensen then walked to load the bases. Wisner then scored when Roy Larsson walked Abrams, batting for the second time in the inning, drove in the fifth Hawk run of the inning with yet another walk.

Joliet scored the winning run in the fifth when the Wolves' lead-off man walked, stole second, went to third on a throwing error, and scored on a fluke wild pitch. Joliet added another run in the sixth for their 7-6 margin.

But Harper, now 3-2 in NAC play, had a chance in the fifth to tie Joliet.

With one out, Jim Berg singled to left, Jensen, following Berg, struck out. Abrams then singled to left, but Berg was thrown out at the plate trying to score.

Harper, now 3-3 this year, gave up only six hits while striking out five and walking seven men.

In Game 2, Abrams went 3-for-3 while driving in two runs and stealing a pair of bases in the Hawks' 7-4 win.

Wisner added a triple and a single for the Hawks, who scored two runs in the second, one in the third, three in the fourth, and one in the fifth. The game was called after 5 1/2 innings because of darkness.

Bull Cobb, now 4-1 this year, was the Hawks' winning pitcher in Game 2.

The Hawks play six more conference games in three days heading Wright yesterday in Illinois Valley today at 1:30, and Thornton Tuesday at 1:30.

Harper coach Wally Reynolds is concerned that his team's depth, or lack of it, will hurt during this stretch.

"One key injury," said the rookie coach, "and it could kill us."

Aersermann was forced to pitch all of Game 1 against Joliet because there was only Cobb, who was scheduled to start Game 2, left after the Hawks played eight games in four days (winning two and losing six) over the weekend.

A note of consolation for Reynolds, however, the Hawks committed only two errors in Game 1 against Joliet and none in Game 2.

"Our defense is solid," said Reynolds. "It's been one pleasant surprise this year."

Harper has a very high on

Wolves. Moore went 0-for-3 in Harper's 7-6 loss in Game 1, but Maloney went 7-for-7 officially, walking twice, singling, and flying out. (Photo by Lori Lynn Gray) centerfielder Casey Moore, who was a big question mark after knee surgery between his junior and senior years at Conant High School.

"He's done a phenomenal job," said Reynolds. "He looks like an outfielder."

Moore, who is hitting above the .500 mark, was also a question mark after last year," confesses Reynolds about Moore, who hit .150 as a senior and over 400 as a junior at Conant.

Now Reynolds is sure. "He's back."

Soffball loses two games

First the good news. Harper's Pat Tarver pitched a two-hitter. Now the bad news. The Hawks committed five errors and ended up losing 4-1 to Rock Valley.

Harper softball suffered its second loss in a row being to NAC opponent Rock Valley as errors and walks added up to defeat the Hawks now 3-2 overall and 1-1 in NAC play.

"Errors killed us," said coach

Lynn Hitchcock, who made some switches to her lineup by moving Vir Wedder from centerfield to third base. "We hit an awful lot of foul balls. We were connecting but they weren't going in fair territory."

Harper scored its lone run in the last inning when Bobby Iverson, the team's leading hitter, knocked out a double and then advanced to third when the ball got past Rock Valley's infielder Sue Goodler when came up and singled to bring Iverson in and give herself an RBI.

Iverson and Goodie also connected on another of Harper's five bright spots of the game. After a Rock Valley runner reached first, the next batter sent a grounder toward the direction of first baseman Iverson. Iverson scooped it up, made the play at first and saw that the Rock Valley runner had run past second and was off the base. Iverson quickly threw to short stop Goodler who alertly blocked off the base and put the tag on the startled Rock Valley runner to end the inning and give Harper its only double play.

Men's tennis team starts toward title

Some teams win all the dual meets, but lag behind when the tournaments roll around. Some teams just use the dual meets for experiments and are ready when it's tournament time. Hopefully the men's tennis team in the latter of the two. They will find out soon enough as they host the NCAAA Region IV Sectional Tournament this Monday and Tuesday. The Hawks will be taking their first big step in defending their state title and hopefully go on to nationals from there.

In dual meet action the Hawks defeated Northwestern 5-4 and on April 19 Harper manhandled Lake County 9-1 and lost to Joliet 7-2 in a double dual meet.

"We've found to be a good tournament team, which doesn't necessarily mean we're a good dual meet team," said tennis coach Roy Keasue whose team must win the rest of the dual meets to salvage a tie for the NAC conference title.

"Against Joliet many of those matches went to three sets and could have been won as easily as losses. Right now the only set questions are our first three singles and first doubles.

"We're still making some changes to find the right combination."

Playing first singles for the Hawks has been Jeff English with second, the singles slot gone to Ron Dudley. English and Dudley are also paired up to play number one doubles for Keasue.

The team will begin toward their second state title on Monday at 10 a.m. for the Sectional tournament. The Hawks will then travel to Rock Valley on Friday, May 2 and Saturday, May 3 for the NAC Conference tournament.

Vlomis ready for nationals

by Joe Kusak

When Sue Vlomis wants to travel to take a vacation, she leaves the discus.

Last year Vlomis traveled to Eugene, Oregon. This year she will be heading for San Angelo, Texas.

For the second consecutive year Vlomis has qualified for the NAC nationals on her specialty and will try to improve on her fifth place finish in nationals last year.

Vlomis earned her self the trip at an expense paid by Harper, by winning the discus 11 feet 3 inches at the Northern Invitational April 15, qualifying being 130-feet.

"I was surprised with my throw, everything came together," said Vlomis of her toss. "I always seem to do better under pressure. The meet being at Northern had a lot to do with it. I'm trying to get a scholarship there, and I wanted to make a good showing."

"On the throw I got that little extra that I didn't have last year. Just being more physically fit this year has played a big part. Last year at nationals I wasn't prepared physically or mentally. One of my goals this year is to place at nationals and last year 132-foot was it, so you never know."

Vlomis won the Illinois state title for the discus when she was a senior at Rolling Meadows but start throwing the discus until late in high school.

"I love throwing the discus," said the sophomore who was the only woman on the Harper track team last year. "I didn't start throwing the discus until my junior year in high school. Before I was a shot putter all through junior high and high school. When discus came out, I didn't want to take many vacations and this way I get to travel for free."

Vlomis will be heading for Texas in May in with nationals being 15, 16 and 17 and hopefully come home with a gold medal in her possession.

Committee steers funding for 80-81

One of the most difficult chores is to make up a budget, and doing just that is the job of the student activities Budget Steering Committee. The committee has to deal with budgeting the money for all clubs and organizations as well as special activities at Harper. Student Senate treasurer Joann Evans chairs the committee which also includes Senate president Mike LaVarney, Karen Turpin from the program board, Kim Garner of the student Trustee Bruce Zanca and activities advisors Jean Paskann and Fred Waters.

This year the committee has to budget an allocated $175,000 from the student activities fees, with $197,000 in budget requests. "Every year everything seems to want everything," Mike LaVarney stated. But the committee is doing all right and that the process "is not doing bad at all." One factor that the committee asks for is for members to put in a lot of their time.

The committee hears out all the requests from organizations on campus. This might deal with anything from new equipment say, for athletics, to adding issues for the Harbinger or Point of View magazine, or to paying the travel expenses for the political science club to attend the Model United Nations meeting. Besides all of the requests the committee also has to deal with the Program Board's proposed schedule of concerts and lectures.

LaVarney said it is hard to decide just where to cut, but that the committee tries to be as fair as possible in the decision. "We know the importance to the clubs of their requests," LaVarney said. The committee this year has been able to drop some mandatory budget allocations that they had been forced to deal with in past years such as a $7000 facility charge, but at the same time the committee has had to add items such as funding the Point of View magazine. One area LaVarney would like to see trimmed is the budget's giant allocation to the athletics program. The amount allocated to athletics is $120,000 and LaVarney feels that the P.E. Department should pay some of that. He thinks LaVarney feels that all organizations should try to help out with extra revenue gained from sales or sponsored social events. "I don't think it's too unreasonable for organizations to find extra revenue sources," LaVarney says.

The committee hopes to complete the budgeting by June 20 from that point the budget will go through a long string of approvals. The first of these approvals is an ok from activities director Jean Paskann. Then, the budget will go to President McGrath. Finally the budget will go to the Board of Trustees for scrutinizing and final approval.

Controversial ERA debated in history class

by PETER WICKLUND

First was the need of the head of the moderator. Then the speakers took their place. Both gave their background information. The foe again looked at the moderator and the fight began. But what followed was not bloodshed, but an intense debate on one of the most controversial topics of today: the Equal Rights Amendment.

Last week Elizabeth Clark, of the organization Stop ERA, and Edna Shane, of the ERA, Illinois, debated the issues that compromise the ERA in Sharon Altier's class, Women: The American Experience. The debate was scheduled after the class covered the issue in the last few weeks. Both Ms. Clark and Ms. Shane were allowed 15 minutes to state their side of the argument and then five minutes of rebuttal time. After the debate concluded, both speakers were available for questioning.

Ms. Clark began working against the ERA and heard concern from students at the college she was attending. She worked for the passage of a Title IX equal funding bill. A member of the League of Women Voters, Ms. Clark was in the operator of a small order business. Ms. Clark was in Springfield last week for the ERA. The bill narrowly passed and will move onto the House floor.

Ms. Shane has resided in several states but now makes her home in Illinois. A member of the League of Women Voters, Ms. Shane was shocked to discover that the ERA had not been ratified in Illinois. Ms. Shane, also a homemaker, said she will "continue working for the ERA until it is passed." Ms. Shane was also present in Springfield during the vote.

"The basis of the ERA is as follows: if a law restricts rights it will no longer be valid. If it protects rights of only one sex, it will be extended to cover both sexes. In other words, the ERA will remove sex as the factor in determining the legal rights of men and women. Opponents of the ERA say that it is not necessary because existing laws already provide equality and that the central government will have a large boost in power. The amendment has been voted on and passed by both the U.S. House and the Senate. Also 28 states have approved the measure. 38 are needed to pass it.

Ms. Clark argues that the "constitution is already written neutrally" and reminded the class that the ERA will be a binding law. Ms. Clark stated the ERA will be "a protective shield against continued discrimination." Ms. Shane said "if the ERA will in no way touch the precedence that regulates private life."

After both women stated their sides of the issue and both had rebutted their opponents' speech, the debate was open for questions. One student asked, "I felt the effects of discrimination when I worked, and I know that the ERA would protect against this happening, but as a mother I worry about whether my daughter will have to go through this." This issue of the draft fight. This issue of the draft fight sparked a hot debate between all the factions involved. Both Ms. Shane and Ms. Clark agreed on the fact that congress already can draft women if they need arms. Ms. Clark however, said that she is fearful of woman handling herself in a combat situation. This angered student Susane Clouse greatly. Ms. Clouse, a nurse in the Vietnam war, told Ms. Clark that she had to defend herself with an M16 on numerous occasions. Another student asked a simple and very honest question. "Before I took this class I was not really aware of the impact of the ERA," the student said, "and I wonder just how many people are truly aware of the legislation?"

The debate ended and the students were left to make a decision on their own. Ms. Shane and Ms. Clark ended another debate on the controversial subject and then momentarily forgetting their rivalry they joined Ms. Altier for coffee.

Jane Byrne to attend fashion show

The fashion design students of Harper College will present "Fashion, Chicago Style," a showing of their own designs on Friday, May 9 at 8:00 p.m. in the M16.

The collection of over 120 original designs, selected by a jury of fashion professionals, includes imaginative fabrics, painted silks, hand knit and loomed wools and embroidered fabrics. All the unusual fabrics have been designed and executed by first and second year students in the accredited program.

Body Art, a special craft category in the Harper design program, is described as "shape the dimensional artwork for the body," although many of the creations could also be displayed as wall hangings. Students will model over 20 of their own futuristic inspirations. One of these is an electric costume for the twenty-first century that will light up the runway.

In keeping with the show's title, "Fashion-Chicago Style," the fashion design students have named Mayor Jane Byrne "The First Mayor of Chicago to be Personally Interested in Women's Fashion." It is expected that Mayor will be on hand to receive the recognition personally as well as to watch her daughter, Kathy Byrne, model in the student show.

Other guest "celebrity" models are Jassy Yvissaker, wife of William Yvissaker, president of Credit, Inc.; Betty Brown, wife of Floyd Brown of W.G.N.; Mrs. Maggie Creek; Mrs. Sally Hayward, Mrs. Sante Keating, and Mrs. Kra Howard. Bears will join other Bears football team members in escorting the student models.

A visual presentation of Chicago past and present, will be the backdrop for the student-staged show. Music by Arvoe will set the pace for the presentation. The public is welcome to attend the show. Tickets will be available at the door at $2.00. Harper students with activity card will pay $1.00.

Public access to reservoir granted

The Harper College Board of Trustees voted to grant public access to the perimeter roads part of the Salt Creek reservoir project.

The project entails the construction of a reservoir on the northwest corner of Algonquin and Quentin hills. It is part of a $2 million flood control project. The lake will be open to the public and will be used for fishing, boating and picnicking. Final wording of the project will be worked out with the Palatine Park District. However, the board agreed to provide 40 parking spaces which will be maintained by the park district.

Harper honors outstanding athletes (See page 2)

FORUM

Editorial Promises spring eternal while patience runs low

Hope springs eternal. And one thing that Harper seemed to have plenty of these past semesters was hope.

Building M was the big attraction this fall. But, low and behold, the opening was delayed due to construction problems. The long-awaited opening of the building arrived late in the fall semester, minus the swimming pool and racquetball facilities.

As winter drew closer, minds drifted back to the "Blizzard of '79," and seemingly endless mounds of snow. And everyone hoped that this winter wouldn't be a repeat performance.

And, of course, the end of each semester brings the familiar "I just hope that I pass the class" lament.

Buildings I and J made their debut this semester. Even though Bldg. J opened a bit later than Bldg. I, everything seems to be in good order. Until the child care facility was inspected closely. Little curiosity seekers wandering too close to the edge of the playground could easily slip over the low fencing. But, various people "promised" that the situation would be rectified in the spring. Hopefully.

With the opening of each sports season, the few Harper fans that exist hoped for a winner. These hopes fell flat with the exception of a few outstanding athletes and the women's gymnastics team that earned the privilege to compete nationally.

Now, hope is not such a bag thing. It does help in getting through some rough situations and everyone should keep a little inside themselves. But just how much shining bureaucratic hope can people take? True, there are some problems that can not be helped (unforeseen construction delays, equipment arriving late, etc.). But what about those that could be remedied with just a little action?

If the swimming pool and racquetball facilities are not ready for use, why aren't they being worked on? Wander into Bldg. M anytime and there they are: the glorious but not ready for use yo! facilities without one worker in sight. And watch the children play in the courtyard between Bldgs. I and H, because they can't use the new playground. These topics are discussed, possibly at great length, but all the talk in the world will not remedy them.

Maybe someday Harper will have a completely functioning athletic facility, a winning team for each season, big name bands for concerts and a real theater for the drama department. But until that time it seems that the "wait until next year" attitude prevails and everyone sits back and hopes for the desired results. As the old saying goes, good things come to those who wait.

But, with no tangible results hope just keeps slipping away.

Transients are always welcome here

The red neon sign read, "Welcome." It should have read, "transients welcome." But, the correct letters were burnt out. Oh, I'm sure you realize the place where the sign hung was not in the suburbs. No, it was in the great city of Chicago. On the front steps of this building sat a mad with a tennis bag, I suppose a bottle of something was inside the bag. He looked out at the passing traffic, and I thought, "I wonder how much education this guy's got?"

One of my friends, Christy (I'll withhold her last name) says that her mother's idea of culture is to drive in the less affluent areas of the great city of Chicago. Frankly, I have to agree.

I talked to some students who said, "I rarely go into the city." And this made me wonder why not.

Sure, I live out in the suburbs too. But, I go into the city at least once or twice a week. I love all the great big buildings, all the great shops that you can't find any parking for, the disorganization of centers that are next to each other, and most of all the people.

If you have never had the pleasure of talking to someone from Chicago, I suggest you try it. Tell them you're from Des Moines and you're in town for the athletic regional convention, and ask where there is a good place to go.

It's funny, last week when I was going to a Cub game, I took the "X" train to meet an elderly gentleman. He asked, "The Cubbies gonna win today?" I said, "I doubt it, Roosevelt is pitching." He said, "I remember the old days. That dog for 26 cents, a cold beer for 10 cents, you know, Wrigley Field is the only ballpark that serves 3 beer" happened after the war. WWII, they never went back to the regular beer."

Pretty soon Clark St. came up and I left my friend to walk on to the ball park. And I wondered still, "I wonder if any of those people ever had the chance to go to college?"

Recently, one of my fellow students dropped out of his second class in so many weeks. I said to him, "What's a matter, bad grades?"

He replied very quickly, "No! I don't want to do the term paper for one, and for the other, well, it's too much work."

Well to say I was quite upset would be an understatement. My buddy dropped two classes that I recommended. And here I was preparing a final draft of an assigned term paper, sweating bullets because I didn't want to take the class over again, and my friend was going to spend the weekend in Lake Geneva signing a few cold ones.

"Then I turned around and asked if my other friend in that same room had to turn in all their note cards." He said, "What's that? We didn't have to turn in any, nor did my teacher even want to see an outline. Who do you go to?"

I replied and looked at my friend and frowned. He sat there laughing, and said, "He's one of the toughest teachers in this school, what did cha take him for?"

I said, "I wanted to learn something, not skate through college like everyone did in high school."

And I too, was surprised at what I had just said. I thought about that guy under the neon sign and laughed wryly, "and this is education."

A little while later, I said to my friend, "Sometimes I wonder if this is all worth it. You know, note cards, foot notes, sociology homework, history readings, speech preparation. Wouldn't it just be easier to get a place where a sign reads, "transients welcome?"

He didn't answer. I went about my final draft.

As I was sitting in my room pouring away at my typewriter, I thought about my friend Christy's mother, and her statement concerning culture. College has taught me a lot, but the places and faces in the city, both the winners and losers have taught me something too. And that simply is, it's all an education.

So to all of you grabbing congratulations. To everyone transferring, good luck. To everyone staying on, see you next year. And to everyone dropping out, I hope you have learned something.

No, college does not promise you will be successful. But, at least you have had an opportunity to go to college and find out what it's like.

And then too, maybe that guy sitting on the front steps with the tennis bag went to college, and that is where he wants to be.

At least there is a place where "transients" are always very "welcome."

Letters to the Editor

Harper library no help for term paper blues

Dear Editor,

Sigh! I've got those of Term Paper Blues. Writing a term paper would be a lot less frustrating, however, if the Harper library had all of the materials that are needed to write a well-researched paper. I found most of the sources in the "Reader's Guide to Periodicals Literature, otherwise known as 'the researcher's bible.'" But, although I was able to locate the articles in the Reader's Guide, I found it extremely difficult to obtain the magazines in the Harper library. I began my literary scavenger hunt with ten magazine sources; I concluded the search with half of the articles crossed off my list. Harper had only five of the ten magazines I needed for my paper. My incident may have been extreme, but it restricted me; as it might restrict you, from writing an effective term paper. Approximately one-third of the periodicals listed in the Reader's Guide are not supplied in the Harper library.

Here is a realistic translation: If you need fifteen articles to write a paper, you may only be able to find ten of them.

In order to find enough sources, a student would have to expand his topic of "The Battle of Gettysburg" to "The Civil War: Before and After and In-Between."

The magazines Harper doesn't have include worthy periodicals like Politics Today, Astronomy, and Human Behavior; they also don't have many popular magazines such as Rolling Stone, Melody, and People Weekly.

Harper has a whole tomb of magazines that aren't listed in the Reader's Guide, but they might as well stay buried, without these obsolete magazines listed in the Reader's Guide, they are as useful to a researcher as screenshots are to a submarine. To top this all off, Miss Library Reference Lady 1980 (the one who fetches what magazines they have) proved to me she was missing more than just periodicals.

"We don't have Marlowe's and we don't have Foreign Affairs," she told me. "I couldn't find the New York, so I assumed you wanted the New Yorker. Here."

She plopped the magazines onto the desk. I did not want the New Yorker. "Now which Harrow magazine do you want?" "How many are there?" I asked her.

She glared at me impatiently. "Well, we have a Harrow called Craft Harrow and a Harrow called Harrow." "I'll take the Harrow called Harrow," I specified, not believing what I was saying and suspecting I had become Alice in Wonderland.

I want to turn in a well-researched paper with a lot of good sources and -in retrospect- get back a well-deserved "A" with a lot of self-satisfaction. At Harper it isn't too easy but then again... does anyone know where I can buy a well-researched paper with a lot of good resources that'll get me an undeserved "A" with no self-satisfaction whatsoever?

Silent students cause of increase

Dear Editor,

Before you start counting your surveys concerning student views on the proposed tuition increase, let me hit you with a few realities. The students can and will do nothing about the dollar per semester hour increase in tuition. The increase will be implemented and the students will pay it. It won't decrease the enrollment and it won't cause students to go to other schools. They deserve the increase in tuition. Let me tell you why.

In the fall of 1978 a referendum for a tax increase to support Harper was proposed. It failed. You could just hear the people then saying how great it was, how they were willing to pay more taxes just like proposition B, etc., etc. The fact is that most of those people who voted against the referendum were special interest groups and residents around the area of Harper, not the students. The fact was, at the time, that if held the student body would have voted for the referendum; it would have passed. The students had a great opportunity to make the surrounding residents pay for the expenses at Harper College. But, of course, "my one vote really doesn't matter anyway" (the unwritten law of the Harper College student) prevailed.

Now the board has proposed a one dollar increase and you want to know the students' opinions? I don't care what their opinions are! They had their chance to voice their opinions with a vote to pass a referendum which would have provided enough money so that the tuition would still be at $7 dollars per semester hour. If they don't want to pay the extra dollar an hour tuition, then why doesn't our new trustees (I'm sure he is willing) ask the board to bring up a referendum and rally the students to vote for it (or at least half the students anyway. That way there would be no increase for the students. (I must be too democratic for this school.)

As it stands now the board will ask for the dollar increase and they will get it. The student will pay the increase, they won't consider other schools and they won't complain. They have no right to. Glen Weber

By any measure festival a success

Dear Editor,

On behalf of the Shakespeare Festival Committee and all of the participants, I would like to thank everyone who attended any of the events of the Festival. It was, by any measure, a success.

I would also like to express my appreciation to the members of the committee and the participants for all they did to contribute to the success of the Festival. Without the encouragement of President McGrath, the Board of Trustees, and the generosity of the Harper Foundation, the Festival would never have been held.

Plans are already being laid for the 1981 Second Annual Harper College Shakespeare Festival. You are invited to attend next year's salute to the Bard.

NEW POINTS

Well, it's election year again, and everywhere we look we either read something or hear someone making all sorts of comments about this candidate or that one. With the key insight that astrology offers an personality profiles, I figure that I ought to get in on some of the action. Therefore, I will share with you, from an astrologer's perspective, some of my viewpoints on some very public figures.

There has'nt much that needs to be said about Jimmy Carter. We've seen him around long enough to know how he goes about his business. He is honest and dignified as reflected in his chart by Jupiter in Sagittarius. His Scorpio Moon represents his never ending patience, extreme caution, strategic defensiveness and his "secret" chemical Libra Sun and Ascendant account for his indecisiveness, (which seems to get us further along on the road is nowhere). Of course, I must add that he has displayed the positive elements of the sign Libra also: qualification of peace, beauty and harmony. This is obvious through his repeated efforts made to rally the S&L's.

and his continuous work aimed at peace settlements in the Mid East. John Anderson, although an Aquarian Sun, seems to match Carter with many of the same qualities. He has two planets and the Moon in the indicative Libra himself. His recent change from a Republican sign to that of Independent illustrates this perfectly. Anderson's Scorpio ascendant makes him an excellent plotting and persevering as is Carter. But Mars rising in his chart indicates a great deal of impatience and aggression. When challenged, this would prompt Anderson into impulsive and direct action. Here's a man that would do more and wait less.

The main question that brings up is more what? Next, consider Ronald Reagan, another Aquarian with Scorpio rising. So far, this indicates similarities to Anderson's basic nature. What makes the difference, is BIG difference: is the emphasis of Reagan in Capricorn and a strong Taurus Moon. In some ways, this makes Reagan an opposite extreme from the other two. He is extremely direct and assertive in thought and action. While slow to make decisions, once they're made, they're made and that's IT! Unlike Carter and Anderson, he is very traditional, unchanging and stubborn. While many of us automatically react to these traits as negative, we have to consider the flip side of the coin. A man like this can provide our country with stability, solidity and fixity of purpose. If that's what we want!

Last of all, I have Ted Kennedy's chart which I won't compare to the others. He belongs in a class of his own. His Pluton Sun reflects qualities of idealism, creativity, and emotional sensitivity. His Capricorn ascendant symbolizes a serious and responsible image. Other features in his chart indicate that under extreme pressure, in a crisis, he can become very impulsive in thought, unsure of reality and may tend to escape from issues. This was clearly demonstrated through the Chappaquiddick incident, not that I want to dig up dirt from the past. Who's to say that he wouldn't respond to other urgent matters in the same way if elected? The tendency to react in this manner is symbolized in his chart, but I do believe that we have fair control over our own actions regardless of what the "stars" indicate. By now, we may have learned how to take control of himself to overcome these characteristics. But who wants to take a chance?

heard all of the "taunts" on the candidates that you can take (I don't get to be worn out after awhile. But sometime between now and election day, take a few moments to ponder these thoughts.

How can anyone pick and choose what is better than the rest? Each one is best in some ways, and likewise, each one is the worst. Unfortunately, no one is, yet, is perfect. We do need to base our choices on some form of comparison, so, rather than eliminate a man on the basis of his faults, nominate one on the basis of his strengths!

As this is the last column that I will be writing for the Harbinger newspaper, I would like to thank all of the open-minded persons who's curious contributions have made this column possible, especially everyone on the Harbinger staff that helped. Thanks!

Is 'new music' art?

This column had been intended to add a little personal opinion to the Harbinger. Unfortunately it has created too much controversy and I really wonder if the time is right to write "Moods For Moderns" and all the letters in this column could have been expended in some way which might have proved beneficial to this great big world.

That is the point of my, my last column. Should we as listeners and college students spend so much time listening to the groups, singers and albums that we have in this past year? I would answer you, if only to check on the "art" of music what art there is.

Let's face it, there is no art in rock'n'roll, nor was art ever intended to be in rock'n'roll. Many students have their favorite stars emblazoned on their T-shirts. I, too, am guilty of owning a Fleetwood Mac T-shirt. The T-shirt symbolizes what it is all about—money, not art.

Money, some people say is the root of evil and corruption. I suppose that is true even in the music industry today. Only a fool would think that the top 40 spots in radio are not thought. Recently, a friend of mine associated with a major label told me that the next hit song was going to be such and such and in a few weeks he was right. How did he know? He knew the company said $20,000 to buy the single in a number five.

Is there art in disco? Try to think back to the dreaded music. Sure it was trendy. Almost all of the dancers had tight clothes, great looking hair, a dash of plastic and wavy hair, a little tight magic, art? Take a good hard look one at the new wavers. Short hair cuts, leopard skin tight, bottom, skinny ties, ripped and torn jeans. Who is looking whom? I thought it was one thing to believe in the new wave, but have you visited your local record store lately? Every new band is the something, the other thing, and the nothing.

Jazz today is seeing a sudden surge in popularity. But, how long before the money magnet converts jazz into a commercial medium?

That seems to leave us with two alternatives: country and the blues. Country, it appears also is guilty of commercialism. I saw a recent movie with Bruce John Travolta in a big black Stetson hat, starting with a number of country stars. Why did they do this? Was it because they wanted their medium to become popular without the big hype of selling records? More likely it was a chance to ripena themselves to the consumer who buys the records, to be seen by the trend followers.

Now that leaves us with the Blues. And you've got to be in a da mood for drum blues.

The bottom line in classical music, the true art in music. Classical music is the future of ALL music.

And with that I'll say good bye.

Shakespeare course offered

Next fall students may be able to enroll in a class on Shakespeare that is, of course, of the Illinois Community College Board down to approval.

Students may also be able to sign up for one of the following: Microprocessor: Software Applications, Microprocessor Peripheral Systems; Principles of Microprocessors or Design; Basic Applied Mathematics; Basic Computer Programming; Criminal Justice Internship; Arithmetic of Whole Numbers; Arithmetic of Common Numbers; Arithmetic of Decimals; Percent and Metric Measurements; Beginning Algebra; Basic Concepts and Properties of Equations and Applications; and Factoring Polynomials and Systems of Equations.

All may be on the course schedule next fall.

Garry Concher, administration assistant to the dean of instruction said, "remember these are just going through the approval stages. The ICCE mail still give its approval before the college can put the class on computer print-out sheets." If interested students should contact their counselor and be placed on a list. When the classes are approved, and they should be the counselor will give them a call. The classes will be hopefully approved by August registration.

Concerning the Shakespeare class, Professor Michael Baratta said "the last time Shakespeare was offered at Harper was 30 years ago. We have been trying to get a Shakespeare course offered here for many years but, with little help from previous administrations little if anything ever became of our efforts. Thanks to this ad ministrations we have a very good chance of seeing our class of Shakespeare happen."

"Another factor why we are adding the Shakespeare curriculum is that some four year schools will accept transfer credit if students take the class," Baratta added.

The class will focus attention on a survey of Shakespeare's company, theater, and audience. Discussion of his techniques, reading and interpretation of representative comedies, tragedies, and histories will be part of the course.

Enough! You've probably done it all.

WHAT COULD THE ARMY POSSIBLY OFFER A BRIGHT PERSON LIKE YOU?

Drop your guard for a minute.

Even though you're in a two-year college right now, there are many aspects of the Army you might find very attractive. Maybe even irresistible. See for yourself.

ROTC SCHOLARSHIPS

If you're thinking of eventually going to a four-year college, it's not too early to start thinking about an ROTC scholarship.

There are 2-year and even 1-year ROTC scholarships available.

They cover tuition, books, and lab fees. Plus $100 a month living allowance. Naturally, they're very competitive. Because besides helping you towards your bachelor's degree, an ROTC scholarship helps you towards the gold bars of an Army Officer. It's worth looking into.

WINGS & A CHOPPER

With two years of college under your belt, you can get preferential consideration for Warrant Officer Flight Training.

If you pass all the tests and qualify, you'll go through 40 weeks of rigorous and valuable training. You'll earn the distinctive bars of a warrant officer and the silver wings of an Army aviator. You'll have at least 175 hours of flight instruction, 40 hours with a flight simulator, 4 weeks night qualification, and enough classroom work in aerodynamics, meteorology and aerial navigation to last a lifetime.

The result is a rewarding, responsible and prestigious position as an Army helicopter pilot.

STRIPES FROM THE START

What you've learned in college has already earned you a promotion in the Army.

It's true. If you join the Army with two years of college, you can start two pay grades higher. Instead of being an E-1 with an empty sleeve, you can come in as E-3 with stripes.

It means about $60 more a month in your paycheck. And a lot more opportunity in the long run. Since you'll be literally wearing your education on your sleeve, your talents won't go unnoticed by your superiors.

And starting out right can really help you make the most of the Army.

A BONUS FOR PART-TIME WORK

You can get a $1,500 bonus just for enlisting in some Army Reserve units. Or up to $2,000 in educational benefits.

You also get paid for your Reserve duty. It comes out to about $1,000 a year for 16 hours a month and two weeks annual training.

And there's a special program that lets you fit your Army Reserve active duty around your school schedule.

It's something to consider. Because even if you went to a two-year college because it was less expensive than a four-year college, you know by now that it still isn't cheap.

A CHANCE TO GO ON WITH COLLEGE

If you're thinking you might even go further with your college education, the Army can help there, too.

A few years in the Army can help you get not only the money for tuition, but also the maturity to use it wisely.

The Army has a program in which money you save for college is matched two-for-one by the government. Then, if you qualify, generous bonuses are added to that.

So 2 years of service can get you up to $7,400 for college, 3 years up to $12,100, and 4 years up to $14,100. In addition, bonuses up to $3,000 are available for certain 4-year enlistments in selected fields.

Add in all the experience and maturity you can get, and you can see how the Army can send you back to college a richer person in more ways than one.

We hope these Army opportunities have intrigued you as well as surprised you.

Because there is indeed a lot the Army can offer a bright person like you.

No questions for Ben Dallas

"Intellectual position destroys sexuality."
—Leonardo Da Vinci

Ben Dallas, art instructor at Harper received a Faculty Service Award on April 26, for teaching at Harper five years. "I came here for a year in 1971," said Dallas, "but left to work in a museum for two years in Washington." In 1974, he came back and has been teaching ever since.

Teacher Feature
by KARIN J. JOHNSON

But mostly, Dallas spends time with friends. "I love to talk with friends." Sometimes when he is at a restaurant (Never McDonald's. "He prefers low prices where they keep filling your coffee cup") he sings lyrics to the music playing on the radio station.

Dallas' favorite place is Amsterdam "because I can't think of a reason to dislike it," he said. And his favorite color depends on what mood he's in. "Sometimes I feel like a big mood ring," he said laughingly.

He switched to art from engineering because "art includes everything else."

Dallas, who has two daughters, Jennifer and Ena (he made up the name Ena) likes being a teacher. "I like talking with students interested in art. I like to see people find out if what they already know is important or not." He likes teaching art. "The teaching of art involves art."

But Dallas isn't only interested in art. He's interested in everything.

He likes to play tennis. ("As often as I can," he said.) He likes to read ("If I read, I read about art"), and he likes to listen to music. ("I have a complete collection of K-Tel recordings.")

John Schmeitzer, DuPage County Editor of the suburban Yrb, addressed delegates to the Illinois Community College Journalism Association convention hosted by the Harbinger. More than 100 community college newspaper stuffers representing 16 newspapers from throughout the state attended the conference. Speakers led sessions dealing with press ethics, covering the community college, layout, sports, advertising, photography and writing criticism.

Dallas considers everything in his apartment art. The art on his walls were done by his friends or himself. Some of his work is in a set of five frames. Each frame has a word from rub-off letters. They are F R A N K E S R O O M, ARRANGEMENT, ART and WORDS.

If Dallas wasn't an art teacher, "I'd be who I am." He likes to teach. "I would have liked to be an English teacher. English teachers are really neat. I sometimes have dreams about being an English teacher."

You may believe Ben Dallas and you may not. But he's sure, though, that one thing that makes him happy is "not having to contend with questions."

Administrators tack energy costs to tuition bill

(CPS) - Shaken by forecasts that energy costs were going to keep rising, administrators at George Washington University in Washington D.C. sat down last August to calculate just what it was going to cost them to keep their campus warm this winter. They carefully projected an average fuel price of 10 cents per gallon, which would have saddled the university with a total fuel bill of $1.7 million.

Also, CWU has been forced to pay between $1.25 and $1.50 per gallon, and will shell out a total of $3.8 million before the academic year expires. Looking for some way to make up the unanticipated energy deficit, CWU administrators tapped a new source for more fuel funds.

CWU students aren't the only ones Colleges all over have had an awful time keeping up with escalating energy costs, and those costs will be six months from now.

So in increasing numbers administrators are starting to assess students directly for the cost of energy. At some schools, these assessments are being included in the 1980-81 academic year tuition rates. In other places, dorm fees are being hiked to pay for the increased cost of fuel, although dorm residents may end up subsidizing off-campus students' use of classrooms and energy. And at least two schools, students are being asked to pay an extra "energy surcharge."

"Somehow we must pay for the oil," lamented CWU President Lloyd Elliott. Students will therefore find an extra $20-$50 energy charge tacked onto their tuition bills next fall. CWU, once burned by its inaccurate August projections of energy costs, doesn't charge will be yet.

"When you project how much energy is going to be," Elliott says, "you run into all the machinations of OPEC pricing policies."

Students at the University of Connecticut have already started paying a $30 energy surcharge. UConn planning administrator Mary Fischer figures the surcharge should cost "We expect to break even," she says.

Yet this has been an unusually mild winter along the eastern seaboard. UConn anticipates raising dorm fees by $20 for next winter's return to normalcy.

Some administrators, though, seem to favor the publicity value of phrases like "energy surcharge" to the simple expedient of anonymously including energy costs in the round of tuition hikes expected next fall.

"We just wanted the people to know what the increase is for," explains CWU Public Information Officer Fran Marsh. "We want to be able to pay for the oil we're using."

Continuing under a 44 per cent energy cost increase over the last year, USC officials are predicting a 14 per cent tuition increase for next fall.

Thomas, USC's director of administrative services, expects energy usage changes will save $800,000 out of the physical plant fees that if already conserving all the energy it can."

Indeed, scores of schools scrambling for conservation savings are still looking toward increased student charges in part for energy.

Class calendars have been altered to extend intersession during the cold months. Work weeks have been shortened. Some administrators offer special incentives to departments that conserve. At Gustavus Adolphus College in Minnesota, for example, dorm refrigerators have been banned. The effort promises to save costs.

Such efforts, moreover, are often made without resistance on campus.

"We've had a great deal of cooperation on campus from students and faculty concerning energy," says University Florida Executive Vice President John Nattress.

"We've also used less energy because the weather this winter has been great."

But the weather hasn't been great enough to keep UF from being 100,000 over its energy budget.

All Florida state schools have had to accommodate a 44 per cent natural gas increase and even more expensive temporary energy supplies during the Crystal River Nuclear Plant's sporadic shutdowns.

Consequently, Florida has been among the most active conservers. UF administrators are considering a proposal to adopt a four-day work week during summer term. Nattress expects the university will cut its daily class hours soon.

"School hours will probably be shifted to 7:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.," he says. "This way we can turn off the air conditioning at 5:30 and save a couple of hours of air conditioning every afternoon."

Yet the measure won't be enough to make up the deficits. For the time being, the state legislature may appropriate $4 million to help all some state campuses pay for energy.

Chancellor Nattress is preparing to petition the UF Board of Regents to allow use of surplus student fees for energy bills. While there are no plans as yet to add extra utility charges to tuition costs, Nattress predicts housing rates for 1980-81 will probably be hiked to make up the difference.

In most cases, then, the burden of payment is being shifted to the student. As Gustavus Adolphus President Edward Lindal graphically put it to the Student Senate, "The students act, or the administration will."

Kathy Mauer

Chuck Schreiber

When it rains, it pours - on Hawks

by MIKE BAMBACH
Mother Nature does not like Harper baseball coach Wally Reynolds.

Reynolds' Hawks have had almost three full weeks of NAC conference games rained out this year, and, with sectionals starting this past weekend, the Hawks still have six more conference games to play.

Thursday, the Hawks swept a conference tie-in bill with DuPage, 8-0 and 5-0. Bob Slawinski was game one in relief, pitching three innings, giving up no runs, three hits, walking one, and striking out four for his second win of the season.

Tim Maloney hit another triple and scored two runs and stole two more bases to spearhead the Hawk offense. It was Jim Miller's two-out home run in the fifth with Maloney aboard, however, that gave the Hawks their third NAC win against four losses.

Maloney, who leads the state in triples with seven, led off the 'nightcap with a three-bagger and then scored on a double steal. The Hawks added single runs in the third, fifth, sixth, and seventh innings en route to a 5-0 win.

Bill Cobe, 6-1 this season, went four innings, gave up one hit and two walks while striking out four. Most went 2-for-4 in game two and added two more RBI to boost his day's totals to 4-for-4 and four RBI.

"We were kind of rusty today," said Reynolds after the Hawks sweep. It's not the first time, though, that the Hawks have had a chunk of their schedule rained out. In the first two weeks of April, the Hawks had more consecutive rain-outs.

"We were playing well at the start of the season," said Reynolds, "and then the rain-outs came and we lost our edge."

The Hawks entered sectionals with a .333 team batting average, but only fair pitching

CARRY OUT SERVICE

Lady Hawks edge Triton in 8

by JOE KUNEX
Why can't the women's softball team be like everyone else and play normal, seven-inning games?

The Hawks played their third extra-inning contest out of their last five games, like all the others Harper came out on top. Harper took care of NAC rival Triton 4-3 in eight innings with Sue Goodie driving in Betty Iverson in the bottom of the eighth inning.

Pat Tarward picked up the win for the Hawks scattering three hits, while the defense behind only committed two errors.

Harper, 7-5 overall and 3-3 in NAC conference play, travel to Wright today for the final game of the 1980 season.

"We decided we didn't like seven inning games," said coach Lynn Richecock. "Our season has been up and down but I'm still happy with our season. We started the season with 16 and today we had only 19. I'm looking ahead to next year. We're only losing Pat [Tarward], which will definitely hurt and Betty [Iverson] who right now has the hottest bat on the team."

The team played a triple header (yes three games in one day) the past Saturday on April 26, including a 12-inning marathon and an eight inning game right after that.

In the NCA Sectionals tournament Harper lost the first game to Triton, but bounced back Saturday to dump DuPage 8-7 in 12 innings. The Hawks then came back with only 45 minutes rest to slip by Thornton in eight innings 3-2. But unfortunately the best was not last, as Thornton got revenge on Harper. The Hawks couldn't overcome a Thornton four run outburst in the first inning and ended up on the short end 5-1 to bow out of tournament play.

SPLIT VISION, Harper's Jeff English returns a bouncer shot (left) and then charges the net (right) to move in for the hit. English won the number one slugging title for the Hawks in NCA Sectionals tournament. Harper had every player in the finals but English was the only winner.

Harper was runner-up to sectional champion Triton and both teams will advance to the State Region IV tournament this weekend. The Hawks will be posing for their third straight state title and hope to advance as many players to nationals as possible. (photo by Lori Lynn Gray)

After two years, it's all over

The last time. This is the last time you'll see the writer "by Joe Knaeb" appear in the paper. By a rough count, I've written approximately 300 articles for the Harbinger the past two years. Some good, some atrocious, but I've enjoyed every minute of it. I have to admit it hasn't been all fun and games. Many a Thursday (deadline) was spent writing up stories as everyone would be happy. But I lived through it, and will miss it next year.

I've been lucky to see some outstanding Harper athletes leave the past couple of years and make me glad I was part of it sort of. Pardon me while I reminisce.

Freshman year—
First I was seeing the football team claim a share of the NAC conference championship and advance to the Midwest Bowl with quarterback Neil Schmidt being named NCAA All-American.

The same season the women's tennis team won the state title and advanced to nationals, coached by Martha Lynn Bolt. During the winter season, Mike Riel was it all. Winning the national championship in the 163 lb weight class for wrestling and receiving a full ride to the University of Nevada-Las Vegas. The spring saw track people Sue Vlamis and Jeff Brydges qualify for nationals in Eugene, Oregon. Vlamis qualifying for the discus and Brydges clocking his best times ever in the 800 and 1500 meters to make the trip. Sophomore year—
In the fall, once again the women's tennis team qualified for nationals and I wish Cindy Sarna, Jenny Jameson, Sherry Weber and Cheryl Helman all the luck in the world this week.

Soccer was made into a varsity sport and instantly became winners. The team under coach Sander Straba completed a record of 11-1-1.

This year also brought the long-awaited opening of Bldg. M, Harper's $1 million athletic facility.

The 1979-80 winter season saw one team brought back to life. The women's gymnastic team, with a lot of credit going to coach Renee Zeltner, qualified as a team for nationals in Baltimore, proving they are here to stay.

Men's and women's basketball team's turned in winning records this year. Both featuring a host of top-notch players. Wrestling as always, sent a group to nationals but this year came up empty-handed. Women's softball is another team that rose from the dead. The team led by coach Lynn Hitchcock is made up of mostly freshmen and should be around next year. Again, like last year, Sue Vlamis qualified for nationals in the discus. Vlamis easily surpassed the qualifying mark of 120-feet with a throw of 131-feet this year.

Most memorable: Men's basketball! This past January defeating state-ranked DuPage with only seven men at DuPage behind the performance of Tim Logias.

Val Wedner single-handedly leading her team past Lake County by pouring in 46 points from all over the floor. Seeing the enthusiasm of women's gymnastic and women's track coach Renee Zeltner. Time after time, the gymnasts or track people credited much of their success to Zeltner.

Classiest quote of the past two years:

"I'll score 46 points, someone must have had 23 assists."—Val Wedner after her game against Lake County.

I can admit now that I never attended a Harper volleyball game. Sorry women, I blew it. In covering Harper sports I've seen some outstanding athletes from Harper and other schools. But then I also saw some not so outstanding but who really care. I know this is getting old, but people attending Harper are really missing something when they don't attend a sporting event. It's free and it helps not only the players but the fans themselves as they have a common cause to pull for.

I hope you people who are coming back next year take a game or two. Catch a football game, or a men's or women's basketball game and check out Bldg. M. After all you paid for it. Check out a baseball game or softball game. It couldn't hurt. I did and I'm still alive (on weekends that's debatable).

I don't care what other people think about Harper, but I wouldn't be where I am now (where?) if I didn't come here for two years or write for the Harbinger. In the past two years I've met a variety of characters wandering around the Harper campus and have the chance to become friends with a few of them. Learn to meet different people you might learn something from them and visa versa.

Last of all, I would like to thank (is going to) rake me over the coals for this) the Harbinger advice of the past two years. Dorothy Pironon without your help I know I would have never gotten a job with the Daily Herald. You've helped me tremendously with my writing skills and as a person. Thank you. Have a good summer everyone. Bye.

Rawlins, Weidner top athletes

(photos by Lori Lynn Guy)

Craig Rawlins
Like a good neighbor, Craig Rawlins was there. If there is one word to describe this year's Harbinger "Male Athlete of the Year," it's steady. Sophomore Rawlins was a main force on the men's basketball team for two years. For two years in a row he was named on the second All-Conference team for the NAC conference and a prime influence behind the team's 18-13 mark. Rawlins, at 6-8, was the Hawk's tallest player and many times was given the task of defending the opponents best offensive player, even though he would be going away inches and pounds. The Fremd graduate still came through, averaging 18 points a game and hurling down an average of 11 rebounds. If the Hawks needed a key bucket, Rawlins would muscle in for two points. If Harper needed an important rebound, Rawlins was the first one to crash the boards and fight for the elusive ball. "I don't have any regrets at all about going to Harper," said Rawlins, who will be playing ball for Roosevelt University on a full-scholarship and major in business finance. "Playing for Harper, I matured physically and mentally. I enjoyed playing the past two years. Especially this year because we won." Rawlins was also a member of the North All-Star team that defeated a team of South All-Stars of junior colleges this year. If it wasn't for Val Weidner, Harper trainer Mike McLane could sit back on most days and take it easy. This year's "Harbinger Female Athlete of the Year" this year suffered enough injuries to last anyone a lifetime. Even though she suffered from what's called, a broken nose, and serious foot problems that required surgery last week, the sophomore still managed to average 24.3 points a game and make first team All-NAC conference and second team all-state. Weidner after two seasons, owns 15 of 25 Harper records. She closed out her career with 823 points in 38 games played and this season alone she connected 530 points in 32 games. Weidner also led the team in single game, conference and season totals for steals and led for the team lead in assists for conference games. Weidner for the 79-80 year hit an 49 percent of her shots and during one stretch scored 26, 46, and 33 points in four consecutive games. "Val was a very aggressive player," said her coach Tom Trichter. "She always gave us 100 percent. Sometimes her aggressiveness got her in trouble, but I would still much rather have a whole team of Weidners."
